DEATH OF JAMES FISK.

Closing Scenes in the Life of the Great Speculator.

Sudden Collapse of the Patient Under the Wound.

A Military Funeral to Take Place Today.

The Murderer Removed to the Tombs Yesterday.

What Stokes Has to Say Relative to His Crime.

Extraordinary Police Precautions to Protect the Prisoner.

At 10¼ o'clock yesterday morning JAMES FISK, Jr., died in the bedroom attached to parlor No. 215 in the Grand Central Hotel of the mortal wound inflicted at 4 o'clock of the previous afternoon by EDWARD S. STOKES. The details of the shooting have been given to the public by the TIMES, and it is known that STOKES waited at the head of the ladies' staircase for the appearance of his victim; that as FISK reached the first landing of the stairs, seven steps from the street, STOKES, who was resting his arm on the standard at the top of the stairs, fired the shot which entered the abdomen and produced death. But as is usually the case with such wounds, the victim at the moment was hardly conscious of his injury, for scarcely falling, with the exclamation "oh!" he still presented a mark for his adversary, who fired a second shot from his safe covert at the head of the stairs, which, however, took effect only in the fleshy part of the left arm above the elbow, and produced an injury that in itself was merely trivial. The assassin, throwing his pistol into the ladies' parlor under a sofa, endeavored to gain the Mercer-street entrance to the hotel and escape, but was seized on the floor below, handed over to the custody of Capt. BURNS, of the Fifteenth Precinct Police, and having been locked up in a station-house cell during the night, was transferred to the Tombs prison to await the action of the law. The narrative already published in the TIMES has given all these facts in detail, and has brought the sufferer down to the hour of 3 o'clock yesterday morning, when he was in a sleep which the physicians declared to be quiet, but which was accompanied with breathing so stertorous that it was distinctly heard in the adjoining corridors of the hotel. The story of the tragedy is taken up again at this point, and continued to its end.

YESTERDAY.

The surgeons had but faint hopes of his recovery after their consultation on Saturday night. Still, all that the experience of the eminent surgeons summoned to his bedside could suggest, was done to aid him.

Feeling himself that his case was almost hopeless, he bore the knowledge patiently. Speaking to Dr. FISHER, who was bending over his bedside about 10 P. M., he asked him, "Doctor, is there an even chance of my getting well again?" The doctor responded with kindly assurances. The business-like phraseology of the query would indicate that he was characteristically regarding his living or dying from a speculative point of view. He could calmly estimate the chances, and thus added another example to the many illustrations of the ruling passion strong in death. Fisk spoke but little after this, the attending physician enjoining silence, as announced in yesterday's issue.

Mr. FISK's will was drawn up by an amanuensis under the direction of his counsel, Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD. Mr. FISK signed and executed the document, which was witnessed by Messrs. JAY GOULD and WILLIAM H. MORGAN. Dr. FISHER was also present at the time. Though the contents of the will were kept profoundly secret, it was said at the hotel that the greater part of his property was willed to his wife, and certain portions to his sister and father, but there were also a number of legacies to others, and one to the Ninth Regiment. Mr. JAY GOULD is made an executor.

About 4 A. M. Dr. FISHER asked him how he felt, and he replied that he was "doing nicely," asked for a drink of water and seemed to recognize everybody in the room. The opiates which had been administered now began to have their effect, and the dying man sank into a profound slumber. He remained in a heavy death-like sleep from 4½ A. M. until 9 A. M. Mrs. FISK had received the telegram sent to her shortly after the shooting, and arrived at the hotel at 7 A. M. She remained at his bedside until his death, except for a few minutes when she went away to breakfast.

GROWING WORSE.

At about 9 o'clock his breathing became more heavy and labored. A consultation of his medical attendants had been held from 8 o'clock until 9, and at its close a bulletin was posted on the grand staircase of the hotel, reading: "9 A. M.—Col. FISK is sinking." Drs. WOOD, SAYRE, FISHER, WHITE and TRIPLER were the consulting surgeons. Dr. CARNOCHAN was also present, having been recommended by Mr. WM. M. TWEED on the night previous.

Their examination had proved that the ball producing death had entered the abdomen 5½ inches above the umbilicus, and 1¾ inches to the right of the median line, the ball taking a downward course, and to the left. The ball could not be found. He was sleeping quietly, and was not in pain, with pulse 130, respiration 40. The prognosis was unfavorable, and paralysis was feared. All concurred in recommending stimulants; but all remedies seemed unavailing, and it was seen that he was rapidly sinking.

THE CROWDS OUTSIDE.

During all these hours great crowds had been gathered in the lower halls of the hotel, and crowds more subdued and orderly have rarely been seen in this City. The question upon every lip was, "How is FISK?" and the bulletin posted at the foot of the grand staircase was too vague to satisfy the general curiosity. But little news came from the bed of the dying man to satisfy this general feeling. The crowds were kept on the street floor of the house by a guard consisting of a policeman and one of the porters of the hotel, stationed at the foot of the stairs, as was, perhaps, necessary to prevent undue intrusion upon the guests, and upon the scene of approaching death. But the reporters, whose employment only it was to obtain for the public the details of the events which were transpiring, were included in the general exclusion. Mr. FOWLER, the proprietor of the hotel, usurped the functions of the Coroner and Capt. BURNS as to who should be allowed above stairs, and it was only by appeals to that potentate of the hour that access could be gained to reliable sources of information. Hence it was that only rumors which, perhaps, approximated the truth found their way below. At one moment them declared that the sufferer had rallied, at another that he was dead, and before either of these could be verified or discredited it was declared that the physicians had decided that recovery was certain.

THE DEATH SCENE.

The truth was closely seen in the hushed chamber overhead. Face to face at last with a death that seemed strangely in keeping with his career, JAMES FISK, Jr., appeared in a new character. During this whole hour there was about him scarcely a reminder of his life. The associates who with him achieved unenviable notoriety had kept aloof, and this last of earth was not stained with the presence of WILLIAM M. TWEED, JAY GOULD, or of any other member of the Tammany or Erie Rings. In their stead was the stricken wife of the sufferer and her friend Miss HARROT, the two brothers-in-law of the dying man, Mr. MOORE and Mr. SANDERSON, with Mr. BARNES, Mr. ASPKEN and Mr. POLLARD. These, with Drs. FULLER and TRIPLER, the physicians of the hotel, made up the group around the bed of the unconscious man. They had been summoned by Dr. FISHER when he saw the unmistakable signs of approaching dissolution, and there was no person near the bed who was unmoved. Mrs. FISK was especially uncontrollable in her grief, and her anguish was the greater from the fact that she had reached her husband only after he had fallen into the comatose condition, and had not been able to recognize her.

The silence being broken only by the sobs of the sorrowing group, and the labored breathing of the dying man, which every instant became fainter and more fitful, the moments slipped away, until the watch of Dr. FISHER, who sat with his hand on the pulse of the wounded man, pointed to 10:46 o'clock; then all could see that the end was at hand. Then the mysterious change came, and the breathing became only short, convulsive gasps. But there was no sign of agony in the unconscious man. There was no contortion of the face, no twitching of the muscles, no movement of the limbs. Calmly and peacefully this life, which had been so turbulent, ebbed away, and at 10:48 o'clock JAMES FISK, Jr., was dead. Unconscious to the last, he was spared the pain of looking back upon his past, or of contemplating his future.

AFTER DEATH.

The news passed quickly, and in a few minutes was known far and wide. When life was gone, Mrs. FISK was assisted to her room, where she remained in strict seclusion afterward, and Capt. BURNS entering, took possession of the body, to await the arrival of Coroner YOUNG, for whom a messenger was immediately sent. He arrived at 11½ o'clock and consumed an hour in determining his future proceedings in the case. At last it was arranged that the body should be removed to the late residence of the deceased, No. 313 West Twenty-third-street, where the post-mortem should be made at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and where it should be viewed by the jury to be summoned in the case at 11 o'clock this morning, after which the inquest would be held at the City Hall at 3 o'clock this afternoon. This arrangement was made in compliance with the wishes of the family, who desire to leave the City at 1½ o'clock in the afternoon for Brattleboro, Vt., where the remains are to be buried. Coroner YOUNG also ordered that eighteen prominent citizens should be summoned to serve upon the jury, and having directed that after being placed in the coffin the body should be exposed to the view of the friends, he delivered it to the undertaker and took his leave.

Before the body was removed from the bed, JAMES FISK, Jr., seemed only asleep. The color was indeed gone from the massive face, but it had lost none of its fullness; the eyes were closed, as when he died, and all marks of the violence of which he was the victim, were hidden under the bed-covering. Even after the body was placed in the coffin, and exposed to view in the parlor attached to the bedroom, there was hardly a sign of death in the smooth, placid face. Hundreds viewed it as it was thus exposed, and while they went and came JAY GOULD sat a few feet from the coffin, without showing the least sign of the emotion he must have felt at this sudden sundering of the Erie Ring, which had so long resisted all the efforts to break it made through the law. It was a picture never seen before and never to be seen again; the dead FISK, gazed upon by hundreds, with pity only because of the manner of his death, and the living GOULD sitting unmoved beside the corpse, to be looked upon with abhorrence by many who passed, for the deeds which he had wrought with him who was dead. At last the ordeal was too severe for even the iron nerves of JAY GOULD, and long before the coffin was closed he disappeared, and was not again seen in the hotel.

After an hour had elapsed, the dead man was left alone with the hired attendants and curious strangers. Of the scores with whom he had conspired, of the hundreds whom he had befriended, not one remained. But the exit of the body from the scene of the tragedy was to be both dramatic and suggestive. Just before the coffin was closed, WILLIAM M. TWEED furtively entered the room. The crushed chieftain of Tammany having gazed upon the dead, retired to a corner of the room. Then the coffin was closed, was taken up by the men of the undertaker, and borne from the room. TWEED followed, and the crowd being kept back by Patrolmen WESTERMAN and WARREN, the coffin was carried up a narrow private stairway to the floor above. Through the corridors of this floor it was borne to the stairs on the other side of the building, and down these to the southern Mercer-street entrance. To this point TWEED had followed upstairs and down-stairs, and through all the winding corridors, with his bowed head uncovered. But, arriving at this point, he paused, gazed a moment at the coffin which contained all that was mortal of his friend, and, turning, retraced his steps. Then the body of JAMES FISK, Jr., was taken through the kitchen door out of the house in which he had been slain, placed in a hearse, and carried hastily to No. 313 West Twenty-third-street.

MILITARY ARRANGEMENTS.

But, meantime, there had been some show of official respect for the dead. As the deceased had been a Colonel in the National Guard, the occasion demanded some action, and the following order was issued at noon:

During the morning the body will lay in state from 11 to 12 o'clock in the large hall of the Erie Railway Company, in the Grand Opera-house building, when it can be viewed by the public.

LAST SCENES AT THE HOTEL.

In a few minutes after the military orders were announced, which was at 12½ o'clock, the Grand Central Hotel bore its usual appearance. The crowds had disappeared after the corpse was taken away, and even in the death-chamber not a trace of the tragedy remained. The bed in which FISK had died was changed, the room was arranged, and the clothes which he had worn when he was shot were made up into parcels, and taken away to await the order of the widow. Although the crime was everywhere the subject of conversation, there were during the rest of the afternoon no noticeable crowds to be seen at the Grand Central Hotel. About the house in Twenty-third-street, to which the body was removed, the curious gathered to some extent, but were easily kept in order by the few policemen detailed by Capt. WILLIAMSON to guard the premises. At 5 o'clock the physicians assembled at the house, but upon examining the body, Dr. E. T. T. MAREE, Deputy Coroner, determined that it was yet too warm to justify a post-mortem examination being made, and that proceeding was accordingly postponed by him until 9 o'clock in the evening. After the body was taken to the house, it was in charge of the relatives and friends of the deceased exclusively, and no one was allowed to enter the house except by their permission. The mother of the deceased was with the corpse soon after death, but Mr. FISK, Sr., was so prostrated by the sudden blow, that his physicians declared that it was unsafe to permit him to leave his home.

Stokes in the Tombs—An Interview with Him—His Counsel.

The Captain of Police, fearing that the prisoner would commit suicide, or injure himself in an attempt to do so, placed an officer at his door to watch him and prevent it. This precaution was scarcely needed, as the prisoner laid down soon after he was locked up, and slept for several hours quite soundly. At 9 A. M., a carriage ordered by the Police Captain stopped before the door of the Station-house, and STOKES was brought up from his cell, his dress looking neat, and bearing but little evidence of his confinement. He stepped lightly into the carriage, and was followed by the Captain and Officer HENDERSON. On the way to the Tombs he chatted indifferently with the Captain, and asked him if he would eat him a bottle of wine, as his stomach was out of order. The Captain refused. STOKES then begged the Captain to stop and let him have a drink at some bar-room. This request was also refused, and STOKES finally ceased his importunities. The Captain remarked that Mr. FISK was very low and not expected to live. "I shot him in the abdomen, didn't I?" said STOKES, "I saw a wound there when they were carrying him off." The Captain described the nature of FISK's injuries. "I heard the Ninth Regiment fellows were going to turn MANSFIELD's house inside out last night; is that true? If some of those Erie fellows were to run across me they would meet their match," he added.

Commissioner SMITH was in waiting when the prisoner arrived at the Tombs, and his name was entered in the ordinary manner. He was simply imprisoned under a commitment from the Coroner, to await the result of his victim's injuries. As he was crossing the Tombs courtyard he said to the Police Captain, "One year ago today FISK had me arrested for embezzling $62,000." When he reached the third tier of cells, to which quarter of the prison he had been assigned, he observed HAGERTY, the voucher thief, in one of the cells. "How do you do, Ed?" he said with a smile, and looking into the cell he said, "Why, you have got comfortable quarters here." He was then locked up with another prisoner in cell No. 73, but not until after a remonstrance with the Captain and a request that he might be locked up alone. His request could not be acceded to, and he was left with his new acquaintance.

Subsequently STOKES was removed from cell No. 73 to cell No. 66, and left to brood over the fearful result to which his rash deed had brought him. His lost his hitherto cool and nonchalant bearing, and signs of great inward excitement were apparent. During the afternoon a consultation of counsel retained by his friends was held in the prison office. Messrs. JOHN GRAHAM, JOHN MCKEON, WILLARD O. BARTLETT and ROGER A. PRYOR were the lawyers. The consultation lasted for one hour and a half, and its purport was, of course, kept secret.

AN IMPORTANT INTERVIEW WITH THE PRISONER.

STOKES accompanied by his brother, who never left him during the day, was then permitted to arrange his toilet. Some friend, previous to his coming, brought to the Tombs a satchel containing a change of linen and several toilet articles, which enabled the prisoner to dress with that scrupulous neatness which has always characterized his daily appearance on Broadway. The morning papers had been read by almost every inmate of the prison, and at every grating could be seen the pale, wan face of a prisoner anxiously watching his arrival. His composure was the general theme of conversation among the officials. After eating his breakfast he was visited by a reporter of the TIMES, with whom the prisoner was acquainted. Warden STACOM, at STOKES' request, permitted him to come down into the reception-room, where he conversed with the reporter in company with the prisoner's brother. In his greeting there was almost an air of jollity. STOKES had changed his attire, being dressed in a loose-fitting pea-jacket and light-gray pantaloons. Nearing in the folds of his spotless ruffled shirt bosom was his solitaire brilliant. He seemed loth to refer to the subject which was the all-absorbing topic of the day, and a stranger would never have suspected that he was the principal actor in the bloody drama of the day previous.

The following is the conversation:

REPORTER—Mr. STOKES, I am sorry to meet you here, with this terrible crime hanging over your head.

Mr. STOKES—You need have no fears for me. I am no murderer. I have read the papers, and I assure you there is a tale yet untold.

REPORTER—Can you bear to hear the worst? (He had not yet been informed of Col. FISK's death.)

Mr. STOKES—Certainly; I can bear to hear anything.

REPORTER—Mr. FISK is dead.

Mr. STOKES—Is that so? (Calmly.)

REPORTER—Yes; he died about an hour ago.

Mr. STOKES—Well; it is a sad loss to the business community; but the papers should not prejudge me by calling me a murderer. Some of the narratives read like a romance. I never wished Col. FISK any personal harm, and never dreamed of effecting his any. I could say more, but you can certainly appreciate my position. My counsel have closed my lips.

REPORTER—Did you follow Col. FISK's carriage down Broadway yesterday?

Mr. STOKES—That statement is preposterous. I rode down from the Yorkville Court yesterday afternoon in company with Assistant District-Attorney PELLOWS and Mr. JOHN MCKEON; we stopped at Delmonico's, corner of Chambers-street, and took some lunch.

REPORTER—Did not Judge BARNARD say there that there was a bench warrant out for you—you having been indicted by the Grand Jury?

Mr. STOKES—I did not see Judge BARNARD on Saturday, and had no knowledge from any source of there being any indictment found against me; had I heard such a thing I would not have believed it, for I knew there was nothing to warrant such a proceeding.

REPORTER—It is the general impression that Mr. BEALE's severe examination of Mrs. MANSFIELD, added to the alleged remark of Judge BARNARD, drove you to desperation, and that you intercepted Mr. FISK on Broadway and followed him to the Grand Central Hotel.

Mr. STOKES—There is not one syllable of truth in that report; I never dreamed that Col. FISK was out of his house; I supposed him confined to his room with an attack of varioloid; there was nothing occurred at the Yorkville Court to discompose me; on the contrary, I think the case was much in my favor. I had considerable business to attend to in the afternoon; I had an engagement with a well-known gentleman at Amitz-street and Broadway recarding a trot to come off at Providence; I also telegraphed a gentleman requesting his presence here this week. Here Mr. STOKES remarked that he was disobeying the instructions of his counsel, and, therefore, could not speak further.

REPORTER—Do you have any fear for the result as regards yourself? Here Mr. STOKES took a small wallet from his pocket.

Mr. STOKES—Do you see that wallet? Well, as sure as you say it, just as sure will I be acquitted by any jury that can be impaneled.

Mr. STOKES here seemed himself, and tapped on the window of the door for Warden STACOM. The Warden asked him if he wished to return to his quarters. Mr. STOKES replied, I merely wished to trouble you for a match to light my cigar.

Mr. STOKES concluded by again assuring the reporter that it would be impolitic for him to say anything further, and he hoped that the reporter would not attribute his reticence to indifference.

At 7 o'clock last evening STOKES was reported to be in a better physical condition, and more calm and composed in mind. Miss CONGROCK, a relative, and a number of his intimate friends called upon him during the afternoon. He was visited by his two brothers. The younger brother had a long interview with his unfortunate relative, and left him apparently in great sorrow. About 9 o'clock the doors of all the cells were ordered to be double locked, and Superintendent KELSO and Inspector JAMESON, with a large force of Police, were present in the prison.

An Improbable Report—Rumored Threats of Lynching Stokes—Activity of the Police.

The Police authorities having received what they deemed to be reliable information that a conspiracy was on foot among the members of the Ninth Regiment to revenge the assassination of their Colonel by the lynching of STOKES, extraordinary precautions were taken to prevent any disturbance. It was rumored that the members of the regiment were in a great state of excitement, and contemplated an attack on the Tombs where STOKES is confined, taking him from the prison and lynching him. Warden STACOM, of the Tombs, having also heard of these improbable threats, and, becoming alarmed, at once called on Superintendent KELSO, and demanded the assistance of the Police. The Superintendent at once telegraphed to all the precincts in the lower portion of the City to call in their reserve force as speedily as possible and concentrate them at the Sixth Precinct Station-house in Franklin-street, which is but a short distance from the prison. In less than ten minutes the reserves from the Fourth and Fifth Precincts had arrived at the Station-house, and were quickly followed by the reserve force of the other precincts, making in all 300 policemen, all armed. Supt. KELSO in person repaired to the Station-house and assumed command of the force assembled there. One hundred and fifty patrolmen were detailed for duty inside the prison, and the rest were held in reserve at the Station-house.

During the evening, President SMITH and Commissioners BOSWORTH and BARK called at Police Headquarters and remained there until a late hour. While there, Major-Gen. SHALER, commanding the First Division, Lieut.-Col. BRAINE, Major HITCHCOCK, and Adjutant ALLIEN, of the Ninth Regiment, also arrived and remained for several hours in consultation with the Police Commissioners and the District-Attorney. They scouted at the idea that any attempt would be made to interfere with the course of justice. They admitted that the members of the regiment were very much excited at the assassination of their commanding officer, but they were all law-abiding citizens, and would not take the law into their own hands.

Meanwhile the Police had been active in their preparations. A large force of detectives were started off to scour the City in all directions, to note the signs of any coming trouble, and report at once to Police Head-quarters. Inspectors DILKS and JAMESON were also detailed to special duty. As it was rumored that the members of the Ninth Regiment also contemplated an attack upon the residence of Mrs. MANSFIELD, at No. 359 West Twenty-third-street, a large force was collected at the Sixteenth Precinct Station-house, in West Twentieth-street, and a guard was stationed about her house. It was also rumored that the laborers and employes of the Erie Railway were coming over from Jersey City in full force, to aid in the lynching of STOKES, but this rumor could not be traced to any reliable source. Policemen were, however, stationed at the ferries, to prevent a surprise.

Was Stokes Watched for Sick?

A TIMES reporter met JOHN CHAMBERLAIN last evening at the Hoffman House. CHAMBERLAIN states positively that he saw STOKES on the corner opposite the Grand Opera-house at 2:30 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. CHAMBERLAIN says that he called at the Erie Railway office to see Col. FISK. They told him that he had gone out, and that he looked at his watch and seeing that it was 2:25 remarked that it was too late to go down town again. As he was leaving the office, he saw STOKES leaning forward in a coupé looking up at the windows of the Opera-house. He is positive that STOKES did not see him.

Stokes to be Indicted Today.

President SMITH, of the Board of Police, yesterday afternoon, stated publicly that it was the intention of the prosecuting officers of the County to have STOKES indicted by the Grand Jury of the Oyer and Terminer today. The tedious proceedings of the Coroner's inquest would be set aside, and the witnesses would at once be taken before the Grand Jury and their evidence taken, and STOKES would be indicted at once and arraigned to plead on the same day. It is expected that his trial will take place within thirty days.

The Post-Mortem Examination.

The post-mortem examination of the body of the late Col. JAMES FISK, was held last night at 9½ o'clock, at his late residence in Twenty-third-street. Drs. JARNEWAY and MAREE conducted the examination. Drs. WOOD, SAYRE, WHITE, PHELPS, TRIPLER and FISHER, with Deputy Coroners BEACH, MAREE and SHEAR, were also present to assist if necessary. The result of the examination, which was somewhat lengthy, was first: The wound in the left arm was a flesh wound, the ball passing directly through the arm, entering one inch below the elbow joint, passing through the inner border of the biceps muscle, and making its exit through the posterior aspect of the arm. The fatal wound in the abdomen entered six inches above the umbilicus, and one inch and a half to the right of the median line, passed downward into the left through the omentum and mesentery, piercing two loops of the small intestine, and was found in the left inguinal region, about twenty-two inches below the point of entrance.

There was little or no hemorrhage. All the organs were examined, and the brain, the heart and the kidneys being found in a very healthy condition. A great deal of fat was observed in the omentum and parietes of the abdomen. The examination concluded at 10½.

A successful cast of the features of the deceased was taken at 6 o'clock last night by Mr. JOHN L. YOUNG. It is pronounced by the artists as the best ever taken by him.

Miss Mansfield.

It was rumored last night that Miss MANSFIELD, from some cause not yet explained, had disappeared from her house—No. 359 West Twenty-third-street, and was not to be found in the City. The rumor was generally credited, from the probability that she will be subpœnaed as a witness in the trial of STOKES for the murder of FISK.

Meeting of Private and Non-Commissioned Officers of the Ninth Regiment.

A meeting of privates of the Ninth Regiment was held last night at 8½ at the armory in Twenty-sixth-street, Mr. T. A. SHOONMACKER, of Company A, being Chairman. A committee of eight was appointed to draft a set of resolutions expressive of the sympathy of the regiment, and a desire to accompany the body to Vermont. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Our late esteemed Colonel, JAMES FISK, Jr., has been removed from our midst in an untimely and unexpected manner; and,

Whereas, The funeral ceremonies are to take place Monday, Jan. 8; and,

Resolved, That as an expression of the feelings at this meeting, and as a tribute of respect to the memory of our deceased Colonel, we recommend the Board of Officers to allow the rank and file of the regiment to accompany the body to its final resting-place.

The regiment, 380 strong, then formed into line, and marched to the Grand Opera-house, to wait upon the Board of Officers, then in session.

MEETING OF OFFICERS.

During the entire evening the corridors and halls of the Erie Railway offices were thronged with sympathizing friends and ex-officers of the Ninth Regiment. A very handsome portrait of the deceased Colonel was hung over the gallery, which was draped with mourning festoons of crape and white cloth. The meeting of the officers was held with closed doors. The deputation from the privates and non-commissioned officers was received by Lieut.-Col. BRAINE, who stated that the family of Col. FISK, although deeply touched by the expressions of sympathy tendered from every member of the regiment, had desired to have as little military display in the funeral obsequies as would be compatible with the position of the deceased. It was determined that the officers of the regiment in a body should accompany their deceased commander to Vermont. A committee, consisting of Col. BRAINE, Capt. MILLER, Capt. LAWRY and Lieut. MONTGOMERY, was appointed to draft a set of resolutions conveying to the family of Col. FISK the feelings of his officers.

THE VETERAN ASSOCIATION.

The following order was issued from the head-quarters of the Veteran Association of the Ninth Regiment last night:

HEAD-QUARTERS, VETERAN ASSOCIATION,
NEW-YORK, January, 1872.

The members of the Association are requested to meet at the armory in Twenty-sixth-street, at 12 M. on Monday, the 8th inst., to attend the funeral of the late Col. JAMES FISK, Jr. The usual badge of mourning to be worn.

Gen. JOHN HENDRICKSON, Vice-President.
J. W. SOLDAN, Secretary.

In addition to the band of the Ninth Regiment, numbering one hundred men, who will participate in the funeral procession, this day, the Ashen Brodel German Musical Association, of which the late Col. FISK was an honorary member, will turn out over one hundred strong, and escort the Ninth Regiment Band throughout the day.

Obituary of James Fisk, Jr.

JAMES FISK Jr. was born early in the year of 1835, in the historic town of Bennington, Vt. His father was a traveling peddler, who carried his goods in a wagon from point to point, and was well known throughout that section of the country. JAMES seems to have had but little education in his childhood, and while of tender age his father removed from Bennington across the Green Mountains to the little town of Brattleboro, on the Connecticut River. At the district school of Brattleboro JAMES received the little education he could be induced to take, being a wild boy. In time his father built a hotel at Brattleboro, and JAMES, Jr., was a waiter at the public table.

But the restless nature of the man began to betray itself before he was out of his teens, and JAMES left home and entered the employ of the lion-tamer, VAN AMBURGH, in whose show he acted as a "tent hand" and assistant door-keeper. Seven or eight years of this life enabled JAMES to see a good deal of the world, when he returned to Vermont and took up his father's old business of peddling. He was a sharp bargainer, a ready salesman, and possessed a degree of native wit that enabled him to dispose of immense quantities of goods. His prosperity only added to his presumption, and the outfit of each succeeding year eclipsed all former efforts. A spanking four-horse team, splendidly built wagon and superb plated harness was his delight, and he went so far as to employ a clerk to assist him. Even now the country people of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont remember FISK as a peddler, and he established a reputation in the business that has never been since equaled. His custom grew to such an extent that the Boston firm of JORDAN, MARSH & Co., then starting into business, considered it to their interest to purchase his business and employ him as a salesman. FISK accepted the offer, but soon found that a clerkship was not to his taste. So dissatisfied did he become with the life, that he was on the point of resigning and beginning his old life, when the outbreak of the war changed the current of FISK's career, for his speculative spirit at once saw an opening for the exercise of his talents. A lot of old blankets in the store of his employers suggested an idea. He proceeded to Washington, kept open house for a few days, and sold the blankets at a high price, also securing a contract for an immense quantity. The firm made a round profit, and FISK became a partner.

One of the first acts of FISK as a partner was his ordering the purchase of a mill at Graysville, Vt., which was the only one of its kind in the country. Scarcely had the sale been effected than it was found that the mill goods were in urgent demand. A "corner" was the result, the firm clear'd over $200,000 in two years, and then resold the mill to its former owner. FISK also dabbled in Confederate cotton, and cleared large sums for the house, his conscience not troubling him about the dishonesty or disloyalty involved in the transactions. So that it "paid" was all that FISK considered necessary.

All this time FISK lived in an ostentatious style, and made all the noise in the world he could. In 1865 he became too smart for his partners, and they paid him a large sum to withdraw. He at once started in business on his own account, locating himself at the corner of Summer and Chauncey streets, Boston, but the ebb of the commercial tide had already set in, and in a few months JAMES FISK, Jr., was almost as poor a man as when he took to peddling for a livelihood. He then came to New-York and opened a brokerage office in Broad-street. But he was unsuccessful, and it was not until he made the acquaintance of DANIEL DREW that any change in his fortunes was perceptible. DREW gave the sale of the Bristol line of steamers into FISK's hands, and the firm of FISK, DANDY & Co. was established in Wall-street, their operations being so successful that FISK possessed a $1,000,000 bank account. The Erie directors quarreled with DREW, and both FISK and JAY GOULD became members of the Board. From the start these two men determined to gain possession of the road, and their schemes ultimately proved successful. In February, 1868, the famous over-issue of Erie stock was completed, by which the capital of the road was nominally increased from $19,000,000 to $64,000,000. This operation led FISK and GOULD to imagine that they could secure colossal fortunes by operations in the stock. Commodore VANDERBILT held $10,000,000 of the stock, and they persuaded the Board to purchase $5,000,000 of VANDERBILT's stock at seventy per cent, at the same time making a private arrangement with the Commodore to have the "call" of the remaining $5,000,000 for six months, they paying him $1,000,000 cash for the privilege. FISK and GOULD then sold the $10,000,000 "short," and so manœuvred that the stock fell from 72½ to 38. They then "watered" the Company's stock from $64,000,000 to $97,000,000, and purchased VANDERBILT's stock with the proceeds of sales at forty per cent. FISK is believed to have cleared, by this transaction, over $1,125,000. In July, 1868, the brokerage firm of FISK, BELDEN & Co. was dissolved, and the two conspirators at once set about securing control of the Erie Road. To effect this, FISK and GOULD procured Mr. ELDRIDGE, the President, for fraudulently using $500,000 of the Company's money to secure the passage of the bill which had enabled them to increase the stock. ELDRIDGE resigned at last, and JAY GOULD became President.

From that time to the present, FISK and GOULD almost owned the road, and the profits were appropriated by them without any reference to the interests or wishes of the unfortunate holders of stock.

But FISK became more notorious for his "Black Friday" operations than any one of the innumerable schemes he was on foot. A Ring was formed by which absolute control was obtained of all the salable gold in the market, and the consequence was a "corner" in gold on Friday, Sept. 24, 1869. The result was a panic in Wall-street, gold suddenly sprang from 145 to 165, FISK and GOULD's agents forcing the rate by bids, until it was found that the Ring possessed all of the available gold, and intended to hold it for a further advance. Everything seemed in favor of the conspirators, as it was believed that the Government sales of gold would not relieve the market. The scenes in the Gold-room were extraordinary, for a continuation of the crisis for twenty-four hours meant absolute ruin for all of the small operators, as well as many of the leading firms. While the panic was at its height President GRANT ordered the sale of $5,000,000 of gold coin, and the rate dropped down to its old figure. With characteristic alertness, FISK and his confederates repudiated the majority of the engagements made by their agents, and several failures were the result. This conspiracy was an infamous one, and in any other city would probably have led to the imprisonment of the leaders.

FISK, however, had become identified with the Tammany Ring. TWEED and SWEENY were Erie Directors, and corrupt Judges enabled FISK to escape the clutches of the law. As an instance of FISK's dishonest manner of business, it is only necessary to cite the Opera-house speculation. When the overissue of Erie stock gave him control of an immense amount of the shares, he purchased Pike's Opera-house for $250,000 in the name of the Erie Company, but they, not liking the bargain, he assumed the purchase, reimbursing the Company with some of his watered stock. Subsequently the Company leased the upper part of the building at an enormous rent, and FISK also dabbled in other property, among which is the Fifth-avenue Theater and Central Park Garden, his old experience as a showman making him hanker after places of amusement.

The recent acts of FISK require no extended mention. In fact, the less said the better for his reputation. His election as a militia

THE SANITARY QUESTION.

Facts about the Health of New-York City which its Citizens Should Know.

The Board of Health of the Health Department of the City of New-York has just issued its report for 1870—the first under the new mume pal organization. Its rather tardy appearance, however, is fully atoned for by the variety and interest of its contents. The great bulk of the volume is occupied with the subreports of the heads of the several bureaus into which the Department is divided. All these reports bear intrinsic evidence of the sincere interest with which the officers of the Board regard the work in which they are engaged. From the number we have selected the report of the Bureau of Vital Statistics as presenting many facts which will probably be of interest to our readers. It occupies, (with the appended report of the Deputy Register of Records,) 142 pages, many of which are filled with tabulated records, and all of which bristle with figures and statistics, frightful, indeed, to the uninitiated eye, but full of value and instruction to the physician, the sociaist and the sanitarian. The duties of this Bureau consist in the proper registration of births, marriages and deaths occurring in this City. The care of the records of former years also devolves upon the Register of Records, and he is the officer designated by the Board to issue permits for the removal and for the burial of the dead. The somewhat intricate machinery of the Bureau has been managed upon the same general plan as was previously pursued under the Metropolitan Commission organization, with the exception of some slight changes in details, and an improvement in the method of recording mortality, introduced by Dr. CHAS. P. RUSSELL, the present Register, and his accomplished deputy, Dr. JOHN J. NAGLE. This improvement is thus explained:

"The weekly mortuary statistics, (previous to the reorganization of the Department in June, 1870,) had been founded simply upon the number of deaths registered during any one week, or in other words, upon the number of certificates of death received between noon of one Saturday and noon of the next. This figure obviously did not represent the true mortality, although usually closely approximating to it in the aggregate, and sufficiently so in the case of individual groups of diseases for purposes of public utility. In a scientific sense, however, it was deficient, particularly as regards those affections whose fluctuations are recognized as being constantly modified by or coincident with certain meteorological phenomena. In conformity with these principles, the necessary change was effected, although its accomplishment was attended with considerable difficulty. Two accounts are now kept—one of registered deaths for each week, closed on Saturday at noon, and reported in detail for the information of the Board; another, completed about a week later, comprises the actual weekly mortality, and will hereafter form the basis for the annual report."

A printed statement, including the actual daily mortality, the most prominent causes of death, and the meteorological observations for identical days of one week, together with the registered mortality of the subsequent week, is compiled weekly for limited distribution, being sent principally to the health departments of American and foreign cities, and to the medical associations and journals of New-York. Thus forming a systematic, necrological and meteorological record, the importance of which will become more and more apparent, as time rolls on.

One of the most important functions of the Bureau of Vital Statistics is the adequate and intelligent surveillance which it maintains over the inspection and acceptance or rejection of certificates of death. The Board has established an exalted degree of exactness in the returns of certificates of marriages, births and deaths, and such are subjected to a careful examination previous to their being allowed to go on record. The death certificates, owing to the imperfect knowledge of our language possessed by a large number of our foreign medical practitioners, or to the fact of their being either not properly educated or not educated at all, demand and receive special attention. The certificate when presented undergoes strict scrutiny, and, if found to be correct, is marked with the initials of the Register or his deputy, and a burial permit granted; if, however, the report of the cause of death is insufficient, which is often the case, or if there is any reason for suspicion, it is returned to the attendant that such permit may be duly procured until a full and satisfactory certificate of death from the medical attendant or Coroner has been deposited in this Bureau."

We regret that we have not the space to give some of the Register's very full and instructive remarks upon and analysis of the principal causes of death during the year. We cannot refrain, however, from quoting portions of his remarks on "Mortality in Tenement-houses:"

"The whole number of tenement-houses in the City of New-York in which deaths occurred during 1870, was 8,500; the whole number of deaths in these houses was 15,682. * * Notwithstanding the great increase of population in this City during the past year, the mortality in tenement-houses evinced a decided improvement over that of previous years. This amelioration has been progressive in the past three years among that class of our inhabitants which, although numbering less than half the population, furnished in 1867 nearly 70 per cent. of the total mortality, a proportion which has been reduced at the present time to about 66 per cent. These figures require but little comment, illustrating as they do so forcibly results which can be attributable solely to sanitary reform, setting aside the efforts of the Metropolitan Board of Health and its successor the Health Department. It is, perhaps, impracticable by any legal enactment to obviate the domestic herding together of immense masses of people in certain portions of this City; and disease of a special character must necessarily be rife amid this overcrowded population. But that many of the evils which have seemed inherent in such circumstances are not inevitable, but may be prevented, abolished, or mitigated by intelligent and persistent sanitary measures, is a fact which our experience has gradually but surely developed.

"In 1869, 9,601 tenement-houses contributed 14,550 deaths, and the charitable institutions of the city (most of whose patients come from these dwellings) 4,514 more, being together 75·79 per cent. of total mortality. In 1869, 13,266 deaths took place in 8,833 tenement-houses, and 4,065 in hospitals, being together 66·34 per cent. of the total mortality. In 1870, 8,500 tenement-houses furnished 13,082 deaths, which, in conjunction with 4,045 more in the public institutions, amounted to 65·21 per cent. of total mortality. We thus discover a gain of 9½ per cent. within three years—or, in other words, a saving of 2,600 lives, which must inevitably have been sacrificed had they been exposed to former local insalubrious surroundings as well as to the unfavorable natural conditions of the year."

The fact that the number of tenement-houses in which deaths occurred diminished from 9,601 in 1869 to 8,833 in 1870 is announced by the corresponding facts that from 1864 to 1867 the only legal definition of a tenement-house "included every building, public or private, (and every story or portion thereof,) which is rented, leased, let, or hired out to be occupied for any period (certain or uncertain) as the residence, home or habitation of any human being." This definition afforded so large a margin to the discrimination of each inspector that, undoubtedly, many houses occupied by two or by three families were included in the tenement-house inspections at that period.

"The Tenement-house Law, enacted by the Legislature on May 14, 1867, limited the term 'tenement-house' to residences containing more than three families, living independently and cooking upon the premises, or more than two families upon a floor so living and cooking, with common privileges in the halls, yards, &c. So very essential a change, as regards the number of families in such dwellings, followed the enforcement of the Tenement-house act for some time; but, during 1869, they were so completely and thoroughly inspected, complained of and remodeled, that a revolution occurred not only in their hygienic aspect, but in their numbers, has also the peculiar distribution of their inmates. Many landlords, in order to avoid the requirements of the law, so rigidly exacted, altered the disposition of their apartments in such manner that, ostensibly, their houses ceased to be tenement-houses. Dwellings formerly including four, five or six families were now reduced to only three, and new colonial tenement-houses were erected, or old ones reconstructed, in order to accommodate the surplus people."

"An idea has lately been suggested, whose execution, "as the cosmos of our Health authorities," would exercise a salutary effect upon the distribution of our tenement-house population. Within the last few years a revolution in property has been consummated in the extreme lower portion of the City, particularly in the First Ward, by the northward migration of trade. Buildings and warehouses which formerly commanded comfortable rents have thus become comparatively valueless. Hence an opportunity is presented to capitalists of making investments yielding ample returns by purchasing these now idle buildings and converting them into, or constructing in their stead, model tenement-houses in a district of every account to the welfare of the town." Reference is made to houses of this character which have proved most successful in London, under the auspices of the "Improved Industrial Company," and which are now producing twelve per cent. on the original capital invested. In this connection, the following letter of Dr. H. J. BOWDITCH, of Boston, describing these buildings, is quoted at length, well worthy the perusal and consideration of New-York capitalists, who may perhaps be induced to believe, what the late Prince ALBERT once said: "That the interests of the often-contrasted classes, rich and poor, and the only antagonism which prevents their uniting to the advantage of each other."

OUTSIDE OF PUBLIC OPINION.

A WICKED FREEDOM.

From the Providence Journal.

Gen. GRANT has rendered services which aroused the enthusiastic gratitude of his countrymen; he led our armies from victory to victory, till the rebellion met its death at Appomattox; but then it cannot be denied that he has kept his father in a country post-office to which he had been appointed by a former President; nor that he has selected for a confidential service at the White House, his brother-in-law, who, being an officer of the army, not by GRANT's appointment, receives from additional compensation for the duties, full it is said, that it is improper for a President to appoint, at the same cost to the Government, a man whom he knows and can confide in, rather than a stranger. We do not see how this charge is to be answered. Nor is this all, for it is positively stated that among the female clerks in the Treasury Department, is the President's wife's brother-in-law's second cousin. To such a fearful extent has nepotism been carried by the present Administration! It is not denied that under Gen. GRANT's Administration the debt has been reduced to an extent without precedent in financial history; but then it is equally clear that the President smokes strong cigars. It is admitted that more than $50,000,000 of taxes have been lifted from the shoulders of the people; but what answer have we to the fearful fact that the President likes a good horse almost as much as WASHINGTON and JACKSON did? In mitigation of this offence, it may be pleaded that soldiers are generally rather fond of horses.

FAIR AND UNFAIR CRITICISM.

Detroit Post.

Nothing could be more unfair or more dishonorable than the sneaking way in which the New-York Tribune criticises the civil service reform report, and insinuates slanders against the President in connection therewith. The New-York Tribune criticises it in a way intended to make the readers believe that President GRANT is to blame for its imperfections, although he did not draw it up, or seek in any way to wrongfully influence the conclusions of the Commission which drew it up. If, as the Tribune charges, it is incomplete, the report itself plainly shows why it is necessarily so. * * Observe, too, that, whatever may be the merits or demerits of the plan adopted, it was invented, after long study, by a Commission composed of six gentlemen of the highest character. The Chairman of the Commission, Geo. W. CURTIS, the accomplished and high-minded editor of Harper's Weekly. Next to him is ALEXANDER G. CATTELL, Ex-United States Senator from New-Jersey, and everywhere regarded as one of the purest men in the country. Next we have JOSEPH MEDILL, now Mayor of Chicago, the veteran editor of the Chicago Tribune, and a gentleman noted throughout all the North-west for incorruptible integrity. The other three members of the Commission, we believe, were selected from persons familiar with the civil service, on account of their practical experience with the subject, and they are also gentlemen of the very highest reputation for purity of character. Nobody objects to a fair criticism of the plan—to a fair statement of its defects. But a fair criticism will state the true reason of the defects, and will be careful to exonerate the innocent from even a suspicion of blame. It is the spirit and manner of the Tribune's criticism that is reprehensible. And they prove conclusively what we have already warned Republicans of, that the New-York Tribune and HORACE GREELEY are neither safe nor honorable guides for Republicans to follow now or hereafter in matters touching the Administration and the renomination of President GRANT.

MR. GREELEY AND THE DEMOCRACY.

Syracuse Journal.

Mr. GREELEY has two projects which he presses perpinaciously for the accomplishment of a single personal purpose. The first of these is to defeat the renomination of President GRANT, because Mr. GREELEY hates him beyond measure, owing to the fact that the President has not carefully observed the programme laid down by the philosopher of the Tribune; the second of Mr. GREELEY's projects is the restoration of the Democratic Party to life and possibly to power, and that is the main purpose of the two projects. The attention of Horace GREELEY to the Presidency, Sometimes that gentleman plays on one string and sometimes on the other. Today he furiously attacks the present Administration and presses his one-term rule; to-morrow he will ingeniously point out different ways by which the Democratic party could win. But in every instance the tail-feathers of Mr. GREELEY's ambition are exposed to view, though the venerable philosopher thinks that they are covered in the sand.

SENATOR SCHURZ AND HIS FRIENDS.

Boston Evening Traveller.

Democratic journals applaud TRUMBULL and SCHURZ, and other renegades from Republicanism. From this the people can see what it is these renegades are about, and what they are after. They are laboring to divide the Republican Party, and in that way to restore the Democracy to power. The Democracy were hopelessly beaten in this year's elections, and can make no headway against the party, by themselves, next year; but it is possible for them to gain all they recklessly threw away in 1869, if the Republicans should be so enormously foolish as to quarrel, and so subtract some thousands of votes in a few States, from the force of that party which saved the Union and destroyed slavery. Our national mode of election is such that the withdrawal of a few thousand Republican votes from the right side might give victory to the wrong side, at the next Presidential contest; to the Democracy, to the men who deliberately did the dirty work of the slaveholders, to the friends and patrons and allies of the rebels, to those Mckiernans who shouted for a bloody civil war upon the land, to whom we owe the lost half a million of the flower of our population, the existence of our enormous national debt, our great and growing pension list, our terrible taxation, and our high prices. The men who are in this direction trying to divide the Republican party are animated only by hatred for President GRANT. They would remove from the Presidential chair the man who took Fort Donelson, and Vicksburg, and Petersburg, and Richmond—the man who defeated the rebels at Chattanooga, and who compelled them in Virginia, and to whom Lee surrendered—in order to place therein some sympathizer with the rebels and approver of rebellion, and who would use the great powers of his office to promote the interests of the disunionists, as the last Democratic President used those powers to overwhelm the cause of disunion. The joy with which the Democrats behold the labors of TRUMBULL, SCHURZ & Co., and the hope which has returned to their lately desponding minds because of those labors, show what the traitors are striving to do, and they should warn the people to be alert, lest they are also made the dupes and deceived, and stimulate them to crush the traitors, fellows who are working for the enemy, as BENEDICT ARNOLD worked for another enemy of the country, and whose motives of action are not in the least higher than those that led ARNOLD to forfeit his fame and to become infamous—selfishness and desire for revenge.

CONSERVATIVE REPUBLICANISM.

Rochester Democrat.

The NEW-YORK TIMES reviews the political history of CARL SCHURZ, in an elaborate and very damaging article. And the damage consists, not so much in the denunciations it contains, as the facts produced in ample justification of the censure. The TIMES expresses its belief that "Senator SCHURZ has no claim whatever to public confidence or public respect;" and proceeds to give abundant reason for its conclusion. We do not now propose to discuss the inconsistencies of SCHURZ with regard to appointments to office and civil service reform, which are very glaring, and mark him the reverse of a reformer; nor the extortions he practised as campaign speaker, which were outrageous. Our purpose simply is to show how he and others like him have abandoned progressive Republicanism for Conservative (falsely called Liberal) Republicanism, in order to be in convenient proximity to the Democratic party, and thereby to gratify the lust for power which seems likely to be unsatisfied while they remain in the Republican ranks. * * * It seems but yesterday when the eloquent Senator from Massachusetts cracked the party whip in the matter of "impudent" and "perjured TRUMBULL that he had made his bed and must lie in it"—yet today these two fierce Radicals, SUMNER and SCHURZ, are hot for the Conservative TRUMBULL for President in 1872! What are we to make of it? Simply this, that statesmen are but politicians at bottom, and are ready to take any path if it but leads to higher honors.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE INVESTIGATION.

Worcester (Mass.) Spy.

Specimens of this reckless criticism are to be found rather abundantly just now in some of those journals which oppose the renomination of Gen. GRANT, and therefore do their best to discredit his friends. The Senate Retrenchment Committee is the chief subject of their concentrations at present. Of course it was from the first called a whitewashing committee, and reasons were offered to show that it neither could nor would make a thorough and impartial investigation. The Committee assembled in New-York, however, and gave public notice, inviting all persons who could give any information of the management of the Custom-house to appear and make their statements. This notice was received with shouts of derision. It was assumed at once that the Committee would take no other manner of seeking evidence, and the depreciators were quite fractious over the probable value of the voluntary testimony to be elicited by this process. The place of the Committee's meetings furnished further matter of complaint. "The people," we are told, "had a right to ask that the investigation should sit in some other place than in the Custom-house itself, and that it should seek all its inquiries from other parts than officers directly interested in having them direct the search. Proof of this, they say, is found in the Committee's refusal to accept the hospitalities of the Collector, Mr. THURMAN, who, the Prince is told, had at Bedloe's Island, "yet acted as a good family and gentlemanly host should, and set before his guests a good dinner." Of course, we need not go around the country retailing such stuff. Now this kind of criticism seems to us not only captious, but exceedingly shallow and foolish. The Committee's business is an inquiry into the management of the Custom-house. Will it do its members any harm, or diminish their knowledge of the subject, if they should, for some reason, be asked to eat, or to drink, at the Collector's table? Why talk of the "hospitalities" of the Custom-house, as if the Committee were receiving a favor in being allowed to meet there? They are as much a part of the Government as the Collector, and have as much right in the Custom-house as he. The fact that its sessions are held there does not prevent the Committee from hearing the testimony of clerks besides Custom-house officers. Among others, Mr. GREELEY and WHITELAW REID were examined on Thursday, and we suppose the testimony of these gentlemen is gravely suspected of tending to a whitewash of the Custom-house management, or is likely to be much intimidated by Collector ARTHUR or his subordinates.

MR. GREELEY AND THE DEMOCRATS.

Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

The authorship of the following letter is acknowledged by Mr. GREELEY in the Tribune:

From the Lexington (Mo.) Caucasian.

NEW-YORK, Dec. 15, 1870.

S. STREET, Esq., Lexington, Mo.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have years of the 14th inst. I have no doubt that the policy you suggest is that which our Democratic friends ought to adopt, and, taken by RADICAL DEMOCRATS in the last, would result in the rout of their contest, the return of genuine peace and merit would have been promoted. That policy gave you many years in Missouri. Those years have been followed by a dreary triumph. You only see in the Democratic party is mostly Free-Trade, and I am a decided Protectionist. I have no doubt that I might be nominated and elected by your helpers, but it would place me in a false position. If I, who am advocating internal, can see this, I am sure your good sense will on reflection realize it. You must take some man like GRATZ BROWN, or TRUMBULL, or Gen. COX, late Secretary of the Interior, and thus help to unite and reunite our country's sons. Yours, HORACE GREELEY.

We cannot say that we are surprised at the tone and tenor of this epistle. It is in harmony with and explanatory of a good deal that has seemed strange in the recent course of the editor of the New-York Tribune. But we fancy that many of those who have hitherto put faith in Mr. GREELEY as a Republican leader, are astonished to see it, and are asking, how comes it that Democrats are going to Mr. GREELEY for advice, and proffering suggestions of his name as a candidate of their party? How comes it that Mr. GREELEY feels called upon to tell Democrats, in private letters, what kind of tactics will soonest help them into power? How happens it that he is so clear that he could be nominated and elected President by Democratic help? And how comes it that the only reason he has for thinks he should not be the candidate of the Democracy is that he is a protectionist, while they are "mostly free traders?"

Of course Mr. GREELEY has a perfect right to occupy the attitude he does, before the country, and he can do little harm in it, if the real cause for it is only understood. We have no doubt that it is due to an insatiate desire for office, though he may not himself be conscious to what an extent he is controlled by the "White House fever." It is plain that nothing pleases him more from any source, or brings a quicker reply from him, than a suggestion of his nomination. "No, Donan," he says—with much the same tone of faint deprecation in which one replies "not at all," to a man who says "I am greatly obliged," for some favor done—"I am not the man you need. Your policy of taking a Democratic or Republican candidate is a protectionist, you know." Who doubts that the reply most pleasing to him would be, such as, quite likely, he received: "True, Mr. GREELEY, you are a protectionist. We know all about that; but the needs of the Treasury must compel high tariffs for a long time, and that is not in question between the two parties. We can't begin to elect one of our own men. If we take one from the other side, as you agree with us in our sure dodge, we want to take the man who will be most acceptable to the greatest number of Democrats, the larger portion of whom are Southerners. You came as near advocating secession at the outbreak of the war, as any one could without doing it. You hailed JEFF. DAVIS. You hate GRANT as bad as any of us. You are our man, and you alone."

It is not strange that people should be asking, as does an Ohio paper:

"Will GREELEY and the Tribune support GRATZ BROWN, or TRUMBULL, or COX, on a Democratic platform and nomination for the next Presidency, in opposition to GRANT, regularly nominated by the Republican National Convention? Let us know."

To this the Tribune replies: "Mr. GREELEY is not likely to support any one on a Democratic platform;" for the excellent reason that he is not (in a party sense) a Democrat—never was, and is not likely to be."

"Not likely" is not a very hearty denial; but never mind. There is another question to which we should like (but do not expect to get) an answer. It is: If Mr. GREELEY favors the nomination of a faction of bolting Republicans in opposition to GRANT regularly nominated, on an understanding with the Democrats that they will make no nomination, but will turn in and help to elect the bolting candidate?

We would do Mr. GREELEY no injustice; but we would be compelled to believe that he is what all they recklessly threw away in 1869, if the Republicans should be so enormously foolish as to quarrel, and so subtract some thousands of votes in a few States, from the force of that party which saved the Union and destroyed slavery. Our national mode of election is such that the withdrawal of a few thousand Republican votes from the right side might give victory to the wrong side, at the next Presidential contest; to the Democracy, to the men who deliberately did the dirty work of the slaveholders, to the friends and patrons and allies of the rebels, to those Mckiernans who shouted for a bloody civil war upon the land, to whom we owe the lost half a million of the flower of our population, the existence of our enormous national debt, our great and growing pension list, our terrible taxation, and our high prices. The men who are in this direction trying to divide the Republication are animated only by hatred for President GRANT. They would remove from the Presidential chair the man who took Fort Donelson, and Vicksburg, and Petersburg, and Richmond—the man who defeated the rebels at Chattanooga, and who compelled them in Virginia, and to whom Lee surrendered—in order to place therein some sympathizer with the rebels and approver of rebellion, and who would use the great powers of his office to promote the interests of the disunionists, as the last Democratic President used those powers to overwhelm the cause of disunion. The joy with which the Democrats behold the labors of TRUMBULL, SCHURZ & Co., and the hope which has returned to their lately desponding minds because of those labors, show what the traitors are striving to do, and they should warn the people to be alert, lest they are also made the dupes and deceived, and stimulate them to crush the traitors, fellows who are working for the enemy, as BENEDICT ARNOLD worked for another enemy of the country, and whose motives of action are not in the least higher than those that led ARNOLD to forfeit his fame and to become infamous—selfishness and desire for revenge.

CONSERVATIVE REPUBLICANISM.

Rochester Democrat.

The NEW-YORK TIMES reviews the political history of CARL SCHURZ, in an elaborate and very damaging article. And the damage consists, not so much in the denunciations it contains, as the facts produced in ample justification of the censure. The TIMES expresses its belief that "Senator SCHURZ has no claim whatever to public confidence or public respect;" and proceeds to give abundant reason for its conclusion. We do not now propose to discuss the inconsistencies of SCHURZ with regard to appointments to office and civil service reform, which are very glaring, and mark him the reverse of a reformer; nor the extortions he practised as campaign speaker, which were outrageous. Our purpose simply is to show how he and others like him have abandoned progressive Republicanism for Conservative (falsely called Liberal) Republicanism, in order to be in convenient proximity to the Democratic party, and thereby to gratify the lust for power which seems likely to be unsatisfied while they remain in the Republican ranks. * * * It seems but yesterday when the eloquent Senator from Massachusetts cracked the party whip in the matter of "impudent" and "perjured TRUMBULL that he had made his bed and must lie in it"—yet today these two fierce Radicals, SUMNER and SCHURZ, are hot for the Conservative TRUMBULL for President in 1872! What are we to make of it? Simply this, that statesmen are but politicians at bottom, and are ready to take any path if it but leads to higher honors.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE INVESTIGATION.

Worcester (Mass.) Spy.

Specimens of this reckless criticism are to be found rather abundantly just now in some of those journals which oppose the renomination of Gen. GRANT, and therefore do their best to discredit his friends. The Senate Retrenchment Committee is the chief subject of their concentrations at present. Of course it was from the first called a whitewashing committee, and reasons were offered to show that it neither could nor would make a thorough and impartial investigation. The Committee assembled in New-York, however, and gave public notice, inviting all persons who could give any information of the management of the Custom-house to appear and make their statements. This notice was received with shouts of derision. It was assumed at once that the Committee would take no other manner of seeking evidence, and the depreciators were quite fractious over the probable value of the voluntary testimony to be elicited by this process. The place of the Committee's meetings furnished further matter of complaint. "The people," we are told, "had a right to ask that the investigation should sit in some other place than in the Custom-house itself, and that it should seek all its inquiries from other parts than officers directly interested in having them direct

RELIGIOUS NEW-YORK.

Extraordinary Scene in the Church of the Messiah—Rev. George H. Hepworth Abandons Universalism and Embraces the Orthodox Congregational Belief—Singular Proceedings on the Part of the President of the Board of Trustees.

The Church of the Messiah, situated at the corner of Thirty-fourth-street and Park-avenue, yesterday morning presented a scene of the most lively and exciting interest. For some months past it had become apparent to the members of the Church of the Messiah that their Pastor, Rev. GEORGE H. HEPWORTH, was gradually becoming irreconciled to many of the methods and tenets of Universalism, yet no doctrine was ever inculcated, no teaching advanced save in accordance with the strict rules of the creed he professed. Latterly these religious convictions became so deeply rooted in the mind of Mr. HEPWORTH that he deemed it proper to assume honesty and as a Christian minister to take a decisive step in a direction that would relieve him of the embarrassment then entailed, and enable him to preach according to his own ideas of conscientious truth. With this view he sent on Friday last a note to Mr. BABCOCK, President of the Board of Trustees, resigning his pastorate of the church and tendering its acceptance by the trustees on Monday evening. The following day he received an official communication from Mr. BABCOCK, not in response to his letter, but summarily dismissing him in the name of the congregation. It asked also that, as it was too late then to secure the services of a minister for Sunday's devotions, Mr. HEPWORTH would officiate, and he would be "ready for his trouble. This letter Mr. HEPWORTH deemed undignified, and considered himself aggrieved at the treatment he received.

The disturbance was talked of through the entire membership of the church, and yesterday an immense congregation filled every portion of the church to its utmost capacity. A scene of an unusual character was anticipated, and the anticipation was fully realized. Mr. HEPWORTH, in an address which is appended, explained the reason for disconnecting himself from the church, and amid the tears of a large body of the congregation declared his resignation. He then stated the nature of the communication from Mr. BABCOCK, and the allusion it contained to payment for the day's services was censured as an unmerited insult. Mr. BABCOCK replied to the observations of Mr. HEPWORTH, observing that the dismissal was occasioned by a fear of his leading the Church to orthodox beliefs, but the expression was condemned by a general hissing. Mr. HEPWORTH's subsequent remark that he would persuade no one to follow him, and that he would preach somewhere next Sunday, drew down loud and continued applause. In the meantime, there is a difference of opinion as to the extent of the sympathy which may prevail among members expressed for the pastor on the conclusion of the services has given rise to the belief that Mr. HEPWORTH's relations toward Universalism are ended.

Services commenced at 10½ o'clock. Rev. Mr. HEPWORTH selected his text from Matthew, ninth chapter, thirty-second verse: "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father who is in heaven." He said: "Friends, this week I sent a note full of vital import, which demanded the attention of all christian men. For his own part, during the past six months, his faith had been growing more definite and his belief in the Scriptures, as a final authority, was growing more explicit. Not that that he had turned about and faced the other way, but today he stood in his past life in the relation of fruit to blossom. His brethren in the denomination had known of the change, and had been for a long time aware of its progress. No man entertained a larger admiration or a more enthusiastic respect for those who have stood as representatives of the Universalist Church in the past; there his love lay, but he was bound to obey their teachings, and, as a Unitarian from birth, he was justified in doing so. He had watched the denomination for a long time with increasing sadness, and at its conventions and conference vainly endeavored to compel them by his persuasive eloquence to acknowledge undivided and unequivocal allegiance to Jesus Christ. Changing gave Unitarianism form and method, but his work was as different from what it is at present as two things could possibly be. He taught them to look Godward, and believed in the inspiration of the Holy Scripture. Today his teachings would be regarded as a respectable orthodoxy. In his large denominations were sectarian to the last degree; today there was freedom enough in any sect in Christendom. In the course of events a new issue presented itself and was received, and with this he had no sympathy. He would fight it on the broad ground of the Christian belief, and on the inspiration of the Scriptures. He had no patience with, and no belief in, the saving effects of that constant mediation which the denomination represented at that moment. It stood today with loose, disjointed and discordant ideas of Christ, the Bible, and the interpretation of the New Testament that deprived it of its spirit, and left it dead and lifeless letter. He said this in no heat, but after deliberation. The teachings of the Church bound him hand and foot, and in bursting the manacles he ought to lose no friend that was worth the having. He took this step from conscientious motives, and no body or bodies could induce him to act against his conviction of what is right. THEODORE PARKER founded a new school of thought which at first drew down upon him the most severe censure and the bitterest anathemas; but ten years later he was regarded as CHANNING's equal. He had endeavored to bring his teachings into side the Church, but he found that there was no unity among its ministers. There were 287 ministers, but they were like grains of sand, and not drops of water. He was not a free lance. He wanted organization. He came to him from the church for sympathy, inspiration, encouragement, and good cheer. He believed with all his heart and soul, and with an increasing love for Jesus Christ. He believed that Jesus Christ was the love of God put into human shape for the redemption of the world, and he came to bring them into his own personal experience. A thousand temptations lured him, but he was human, and in the Christian light that beamed on him he felt he would be nearer and dearer to Jesus Christ. He stood there on the platform of freedom; the platform of BEECHER, BUDDINGTON, STORRS, Thayer and a thousand others. He could not work any longer with the Unitarian party. If he did not believe in its methods, if he did not accept its interpretation of Scripture, common honesty demanded that he should leave. He left the body because he considered it radical in theology, and that was about all; bad and as destructive in its effectment as could possibly be introduced into it. They might bear it as scholars, but it would produce a series of changes in New-York that would render it a Bedlam in six months. He did not care about jeuring any sect. Whatever may be the difference of methods, all denominations believed in the same Christ, the same Scripture, and the same immortality. He might, however, say he would join the orthodox Congregational body, and the change, he assured them, was prompted only by a desire to save souls. He asked that the friendships and the associations of years should not be disturbed with the Church should not be dissolved, and he concluded by wishing an earnest good-by to all.

At a subsequent stage of the services Mr. HEPWORTH stated that the President of the Board of Trustees had sent him a communication exhibiting a vindictive spirit that he had hoped would not be manifested by the congregation. He knew it did not prevail to a large extent, and he desired to say he would leave the Church without influencing a man, woman or child to follow him. He had none but the kindest feelings toward them all; gone out into the world. The letter he had referred to from the President of the Board of Trustees stated that after that Sunday his services would be no longer required. It made no difference to him, but he did not think it was fair. He was engaged for two years, but at the end of the first year he was informed that the sale of pews was impossible unless he retracted that engagement and consented to remain with them an indefinite period. He consented, and remained up to the present. As for his dismissal, he was appointed by the congregation, and could alone be dismissed by them. He did not deem it right for the President of the Board of Trustees to dictate dress him the letter he did, and tell him that if he performed service today he would see him paid [sensation] at the usual rate. The letter spoke for itself, and in spite of one or two other hards and cruel letters in which he was called a pagan, in all sincerity he asked them to drop the subject. Let there be no unfriendliness between us. Then to my wife and that is my purpose. God bless you all.

Mr. BABCOCK, President of the Board of Trustees, at this point rose in his seat and said that there was no one in the congregation that was more personally attached and more friendly to Dr. HEPWORTH than he had been. He had loved and visited and served him, and did all in his power to gain his sympathy, love and affection. He was one of the number who went to Boston and invited him to be their pastor, for he believed he was with them body and soul. He believed so was one of them in the love of Jesus Christ until Wednesday evening last, when he said he could go with them no longer. He asked him to define his position in order that he may lay it before the church, and he replied he was no longer a Universalist. He had then sent the letter as President of the Board of Trustees, believing that Mr. HEPWORTH wanted possession of the church for the purpose of introducing orthodoxies into it. [Hisses.] When his opinions were objected to, he said, "if you don't like to stay in this church you can go where you choose." He (Mr. BABCOCK) heard him say so. He had no unfriendly feelings toward him, and from the bottom of his heart he wished God's blessing on him wherever he went.

Mr. HEPWORTH said everything stated by Mr. BABCOCK was perfectly correct. But he was not responsible to the Board of Trustees, and the whole congregation only could dismiss him. He was in hopes he would leave quietly and without insult. He would not preach in that church again, but next Sunday he would preach somewhere, they might believe. [Loud applause.]

At the conclusion of the services, a large number of the prominent members of the church cordially shook hands with their late pastor.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE INQUIRY.

Fourth Day's Proceedings Before the Congressional Committee—Mr. A. T. Stewart and His Opinions.

The Senate Committee on Investigation and Retrenchment met in the Custom-house building at 10½ A. M. Saturday, as per adjournment, Gov. BUCKINGHAM presiding. The first witness introduced was Mr. A. T. STEWART, who was sworn. His Secretary read a statement about the General Order business which he had prepared. It was as follows:

The removal of the business from the Cunard and Hoboken stores has not only caused necessary loss, but great inconvenience to importers. The greatest portion of merchandise is imported by steam-ships, and when they make long passages, as during the Fall and Winter, they discharge their cargoes on arrival, to be ready to sail again at the appointed time. When such is the case the importer has not sufficient time to make up his entry and have it passed at the Custom-house. Consequently all goods discharged under such circumstances are sent to a General Order store. Soon after the appointment of MORSE H. GRINNELL, the business of the General Order business was removed from the Cunard and Hoboken stores. At that time there was on the west of the City the same number or more General Order stores than now, but when the business was removed, the number in New-York was noticeably increased to correspond with the diminution of storage room, and the result has been that storage accommodation has been so restricted that when several steamers arrive together, their cargoes are crowded into the present stores in such a state of confusion that great delay ensues in obtaining possession. The number of foreign steamers arriving at New-York during the past two years has largely increased. They are of greater size and bring larger cargoes than a few years ago, yet the storage capacity of the General Order stores has been actually diminished, to the loss and delay of the importer. In consequence of the General Order business being now controlled by one it has become a monopoly, and the charges increased to $1 50 or more on a single package, instead of about half the rates as formerly, which difference is pure loss to the merchant; besides there is an additional expense of cartage, say fifty cents per case. When the Cunard and Hoboken warehouses had the privilege of receiving goods, such as arriving by those lines were discharged from the ships direct to the warehouses, without any expenses of cartage, and there remain in bond without any additional charge. If an importer has made an entry for goods to be deposited in above stores, and his permits does not arrive in time, the merchandise must be carted to the General Order stores in New-York and carted back again, making a double expense of cartage, besides the storage and labor fees of from $1 50 upward per package, even if they remain but a single hour under General Order. The General Order stores now in use are in unsafe quarters, surrounded by cotton warehouses and other hazardous buildings, as may be seen by the annexed diagram. Considering it is difficult to procure insurance, and only at extra rates, while insurance is easily effected, on the most favorable terms, in the Cunard and Hoboken stores, owing to their safe and isolated position. The confusion of sending so many goods from all parts of the City, Jersey City and Hoboken, to these two stores, and the arrival of one or two cargoes will produce, causes interminable delays, resulting frequently in heavy losses to the importer from fluctuations in price, without any benefit or additional security to the Government.

Mr. STEWART then produced diagrams showing that the present General Order stores were situated in places which tended to increase the rate of insurance. He afterward exhibited a document showing the gradual increase of charges in the General Order store, and also memorandum of an agreement which Mr. LEET had made with his house, that no higher demand than $1 75 per package should be charged. In spite of this, attempts had frequently been made to charge $2.

Q.—Who owns the warehouses at Hoboken? A.—Mr. LEET.

Q.—Suppose cargoes are discharged before forty-eight hours, and, in consequence of that, the packages go to the General Order store, who pays the charges? A.—The Steam-ship Company, but as it probably becomes a consideration in the freight, we pay in the end.

Q.—The steamers discharge, I suppose, as fast as the goods can be put over the side, and are run into the General Order store, then, if the owner does not get a permit within forty-eight hours he pays the charges. Is that not so? A.—Yes; but if he does get a permit within the time, then the steamship pays.

Q.—Did you ever lose any goods in the General Order stores now in use? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Have you ever heard of any losses? A.—I never have.

Q.—When goods have been once landed and transferred from the Jersey City and Hoboken docks to this side, what necessity is there when they have come to the General Order stores here to transfer them back to warehouses in Hoboken and Jersey City? A.—They have sometimes been entered to be bonded there.

Q.—When was this General Order business first consigned to Jersey City and Hoboken?—Some seven years ago, I believe, but I don't know the date.

Q.—When was it removed? A.—After Mr. GRINNELL's entry into office.

Q.—Had he been a merchant? A.—I have heard so.

Q.—Is it more a matter of rumor than fact, then? A.—You must excuse me there; if he were present I would give my opinion; as he is absent I will refrain.

Senator HOWE then cross-examined the witness at considerable length on the statement he had made in the paper read by his Secretary, until he became quite restive, and said that he saw no object in the questions, and that he felt far from well. He wished, in general terms, to state that the General Order system was an outrage upon the merchants for its present administered. He considered that LEET's monopoly was injurious to commerce, and he made the suggestion that every foreign steam-ship company that could give sufficient security should be permitted to have a General Order store.

Q.—You said that the Hoboken and Cunard people would allow your goods sometimes to remain six days without passing them into the General Order store; that would be a great convenience to merchants generally, would it not? A.—It only referred to goods that were entered for bonding there.

Q.—Other goods would be charged for as they are now? A.—I believe that; but may have more liberal altogether.

Q.—Was this a special discrimination in your favor? A.—No, I do not think it was.

Q.—Did you ever hear of the same privilege being extended to other merchants? A.—I cannot say that I have; I only answer for myself.

Mr. STEWART's examination continued some length, but nothing of importance was elicited, save his recommendation to the Custom-house to pay their employes more liberal salaries, and to make their situations permanent during good conduct. Afterward, Mr. ALBERT T. COCKRAN, one of his clerks was examined, but nothing material was elicited, either for or against the Custom-house.

ANOTHER MERCHANT WHO HAS NO COMPLAINT.

The next witness was Mr. HENRY B. BARHOUS. He stated that he had no knowledge of any frauds in the Custom-house, and no knowledge of any frauds in the General Order system. All that he knew about the Custom-house was, that six years ago his books had been seized through the report of a New-York spy, who had no complaints to make, and it seemed strange to him that he should have been sent for. He had been out of business for the past three years, and knew nothing of the present system. He was therefore dismissed.

The Committee left the Custom-house building much earlier than usual. There

MONDAY, Jan. 8—A. M.

The first week of the New Year was more eventful than in all respects pleasant in Money Affairs. The price of Money to the Brokers was higher than known for a long time past, while the disturbance among some of the Savings Banks led to the apprehension that there would be a serious falling off in Greenbacks on the City Bank averages of the Clearing-house. Fortunately, however, the Treasury Office disbursed about two and a half millions in Currency, which nearly or quite supplied the Greenbacks and National Bank Notes withdrawn from Wall-street to strengthen the Savings Banks. This circumstance was not known until at the very close of the week, when Money left off at 7 ₱ cent. after the most extravagant daily Commissions had been paid since the New Year to carry over the speculation at the Stock Exchange. The stringency caused a temporary break in the advance in the Railroads at the Exchange on Thursday, which was closed up by Saturday, and prices left off rather higher than on the last week of the Old Year.

The intimation from London that Messrs. ROTHSCHILD, co-operating with Messrs. COOKE, have offered to take charge of the remaining $300,000,000 United States New 5 ₱ cents, and of the $300,000,000 United States 4½ ₱ cents, authorized by the Act of July, 1870, for refunding the 6 ₱ cents, known as 5-20s, caused a strong feeling in the long 6 ₱ cents of 1881 and 1867, which will not be disturbed by this negotiation, and in the New 5 ₱ cents already sold by the Treasury. Assuming that the proposed arrangement should be successfully carried out within the agreed short period, (whatever that may be,) the following United States 5-20s will soon be called in for redemption at par in Gold:

1862, outstanding, Jan. 1, 1872	$431,500,450
Less Syndicate exchanges	193,097,350
Balance	$238,403,000
Less called in for March, 1872	40,000,000
Balance	$278,070,000
1864, outstanding, Jan. 1, 1872	94,313,000
1865, May and November, outstanding	142,917,700
Another call, January and July, in part	75,372,750
Total for New Syndicate	$590,600,000
This would leave outstanding after the close of the arrangement:
1865, January and July	$135,284,950
Less allowed for Treasury purchases	30,000,000
Balance of issue	$105,284,950
1867, outstanding	200,272,200
1868, outstanding	246,443,350
Total of each New 4 ₱ cents	$550,000,500

The Funding Act of Congress, July, 1870, provides as much as $700,000,000 of 4 ₱ cent. 30 years Stock to complete the redemption of all the 5-20s as they fall within the option of the Treasury. But owing to the absorption of these Bonds by purchase and redemption on 30 days' notice, from the surplus of Gold in the Treasury, it is doubtful whether more than $400,000,000 will be required.

The weekly averages of the Associated Banks, Local and National, reporting through the Clearing-house for the week ending Saturday last, Jan. 6, compare as follows with the previous week, and also with the corresponding week last year. To which we add the Gold and Currency balances in the New-York office of the United States Treasury at these dates respectively:

Increase in Loans	$2,171,400
Increase in Specie	3,771,200

The Bank return published this morning exhibits the relative strength of the movement in respect to the lawful money held, as against the circulation and deposits, to which we add the position of the movement the week before, and also of the movement of the corresponding week last year:

	Dec. 30, '71.	Jan. 6, '72.	Jan. 7, '71.
Deposits	$80,429,000	$85,526,200	$82,028,625
Circulation	22,582,800	22,492,200	22,114,738
Total	$102,911,800	$108,018,400	$104,143,363

Excess	$38,094,800	$39,298,000	$48,861,881
Rate for money	7 ₱ cent.	7 ₱ cent.	7 ₱ cent.

The small loss of Greenbacks is an agreeable surprise to Wall-street, after the stringency in Money, and the apprehension of a bad return through the week. The difference against the Greenbacks of the previous week is only $324,300. The Banks, also unexpectedly to the Street, have increased their Loans $2,171,400. The Gold average, as anticipated, shows a heavy gain—$3,771,100—on the Gold Interest paid out by the Treasury. The general line of Deposits is up $5,497,400; the circulation is lower by $90,600. The Treasury Office in New-York disbursed this week $3,266,820 Gold Interest on the Public Debt, which, with $5,850,000 prepaid at the close of December and charged off Jan. 6, makes $9,116,820 thus far disbursed. The Office took in, for the five business days of the week, $2,336,559 Gold Customs. The Office paid out, net, during the week $3,428,000 in Currency, chiefly for January Interest on United States Currency 6 ₱ cents advanced to the Pacific Roads.

The Import Entries at New-York, embracing Foreign Dry Goods and General Merchandise, for the week past, were $7,495,607, as against $3,541,829 for the corresponding week last year. The Exports of Domestic Produce, other than Gold and Silver, were $3,199,293, against $4,187,739 same week in 1870. The Export of Gold and Silver, $2,240, against $481,997, same week in 1870. The Customs in Gold paid into the New-York Office of the United States Treasury for the week were $2,336,559. The receipts of Cotton, coastwise and by rail, 22,737 bales.

Our comparative weekly summary of the Foreign Trade and Specie Movements at New-York is now resumed as from the first of the current Fiscal Year, July 1, 1871, known at the Treasury as the Fiscal Year 1872.

The Gold values of the Import entries of Foreign Merchandise at New-York, exclusive of Foreign Specie, since July 1, 1871, are as follows, the figures being official to Dec. 1, and since semi-official from the Custom house.

July	$16,824,384	November	$24,228,241

Most of the above increase is from General Foreign Merchandise, conspicuously in Sugars, Coffee, Metals, &c. The increase in Foreign Dry Goods over the corresponding months last year was in the first Quarter of the Fiscal Year, since when the imports of Dry Goods show a declining tendency. The figures are as follows:

Increase in Dry-goods to Jan. 1		$6,127,507
Increase in General Merchandise to Jan. 6		19,221,462
Whole increase at New-York (as above)		$24,676,629

The Young Free Trade Leaguers who call our present Tariff "prohibitory," specially as against Foreign Woolen and Cotton fabrics, are respectfully referred to the following compilation of the Dry Goods Importation for the last three Calendar Years. The trade would seem to have been pretty "free" in respect to bulk and value, and decidedly productive in respect to "revenue." We credit the table to Democratic authority—the Journal of Commerce:

	Dry Goods. 1869.	1870.	1871.

Gold, Jan. 6, 1872			109 ₱ cent.
Gold, Jan. 7, 1871			110¼ ₱ cent.

*Unofficial.

The increase in Agricultural exports is much larger than this general comparative result exhibits. In the six months of the previous fiscal year, the Export list included a very large amount of arms and munitions of war supplied to France.

The Exports from New-York of Gold and Silver Coin and Bullion, since July 1, are as follows:

July	$11,222,080	November	$6,134,260
August	3,701,327	December	2,268,261
September	1,305,139	Jan. 6	2,240
October	2,056,251
Total since July 1			$27,689,522
Against same time, 1871			42,666,079
Decrease since July 1			$15,006,457

*Unofficial.

This large difference is due to the recall of Foreign capital employed in New-York, on the outbreak of the Continental War in July, 1870, and the return of a few millions of United States 5-20s from the same cause.

The following are the Customs receipts in Gold, and the interest paid on the Public Debt in Gold, at the New-York office of the United States Treasury, since July 1:

The effect of the Bank statement in the Afternoon was to reduce the rate of Money on call to the Stock Brokers to 7 ₱ cent. Currency Interest, and to further strengthen the Stock Market, which had been previously excited on the report from London that the ROTHSCHILDS, in connection with JAY COOKE & Co., had made proposals to the Treasury for placing $300,000,000 of the 5 and 4½ ₱ cents, New Loan. The speculation in the New-York and Western Roads was buoyant throughout the day, and the demand extended to the Bonds of the Central and Union Pacific Roads at advancing prices. The Public Funds were firm and higher on the long 6 ₱ cents of 1881, and on the New Loan 5 ₱ cents. The latter sold this afternoon at par and interest in Gold, equal to 110½ ₱ cent., including Accrued Interest since Nov. 1. The various classes of 5-20's, 6 ₱ cent., were scarcely as high as on Friday night, though closing firm at the fractional decline.

The Gold Room attempted a war with Spain this morning, and the sales of Gold were at 109½@109¾ ₱ cent. But authentic Washington advices discouraged the Spanish rumors, and the price fell back to 109 ₱ 109 ₱ cent.

After the late Board the following quotations were made, as compared with the late figures of Friday night:

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ WE RECOMMEND FOR INVESTMENT AND FOR EXCHANGE of U. S. FIVE-TWENTY BONDS, the FIRST MORTGAGE SIX PER CENT. GOLD BONDS of the CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, knowing them to be among the most satisfactory and substantial Securities known in the American and European markets.

The cost of the Road and equipment, when completed, will be about $20,000,000, and the value of its property and franchises within five years cannot be less than $50,000,000. The total amount of the Loan now in process of negotiation, and OF WHICH BUT A SMALL AMOUNT REMAINS UNSOLD, is $15,000,000.

A remunerative business for the CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD is not a matter of conjecture, or of slow future development, but is certain and immediate. It is believed, from most careful estimates, that the road will be completed in September or October, 1872, and that its net earnings, over operating expenses, in the first year after completion, cannot be less than $1,500,000 to $2,000,000, and that they will reach at least $5,000,000 per annum within five years.

We believe that the Bonds of the CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO are fully equal in value and security to those of the CENTRAL PACIFIC, and that when the road is completed they will command a like market price.

☞ Present price, 94 and accrued interest. Interest and principal payable in gold in New-York City. Interest May 1 and Nov. 1. Denominations, $1,000, $500 and $100, coupon or registered.

We buy and sell, as usual, GOVERNMENT and CENTRAL PACIFIC BONDS, and receive them in exchange for CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO BONDS. Accounts of banks and others received, on which we allow interest at the rate of four per cent. Orders for Investment Stocks and Bonds executed at the Stock Exchange.

The fact is generally admitted that the funding of ALL the 5-20s into bonds bearing a LOWER RATE OF INTEREST, is only a question of time, and the public will therefore recognize the importance of an IMMEDIATE EXCHANGE of 5-20s, at their present premium, into other securities, ENTIRELY SAFE, and yielding a larger income. ☞ THE DIFFERENT METHODS OF CONSTRUCTING RAILROADS IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the construction of railroads the greatest care and attention should be given to the important requisites of solidity and durability. It is with railroads the same as with houses and other buildings—a solid and well-laid foundation will preserve the structure many years longer. In the wonderful spread of railroads in the United States during the past five years we find that the much attention has been given to hasty completion, and too little regard has been paid to proper construction.

In the construction of the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD no expense has been spared to make it a first-class road, and the managers of the enterprise have carefully avoided the evils of hasty completion and cheap construction. The rails with which the road is laid were made by the DARLINGTON IRON COMPANY, one of the most celebrated manufacturers of rails in the whole of Great Britain. These rails are made specially for the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILWAY COMPANY, and to a particular pattern, designed by the best engineering skill of the country, with a view to great durability. They have been subjected to the most powerful tests which steam and mechanical skill could invent, and have successfully resisted a great pressure. The grading and superstructure are in strict keeping with the rails, and the road-bed has been pronounced one of the very best in the entire Western country. That portion of the road in successful operation for some time past is exceedingly popular, and excellent railroad judges have declared it to be one of the easiest-riding roads in the country. This is owing to the excellence of the rails and the great care bestowed upon the grading and ballasting. The graders are rapidly approaching the Platte River, twenty-five miles from Fort Kearney. The tracklayers are following as close on to the graders as is consistent with the construction of a strictly first-class road. All the iron has been purchased, and is being constantly delivered, a large portion of it being already on the ground. The entire line will be completed in time for the Summer and Fall travel and trade to California, and also for the Summer and Fall movement of the crops and other freight. The road, when completed, will greatly shorten the distance between the Eastern and Middle States and the Pacific Coast. On sound business principles, passengers and freight naturally seek the shortest railroad routes, and hence the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD is destined to be one of the great highways between the Atlantic and Pacific. The projectors and managers of this enterprise are well aware of the strain upon the resources of the road, which must commence with its full opening to travel and traffic, and hence their desire to construct a first-class road, capable of meeting in every way the requirements of a large and growing business. The rolling stock now on the road, as well as that in process of building, is, and will continue to be, equal to that of any other road in the United States. THE ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD, by its connection with the Union Pacific at Fort Kearney, will have as feeders to it all the railroads of the Pacific slope on the one hand, while its connections at St. Joseph will bring to it the immense number of railroads stretching from the West and North-west to the East as feeders on the other hand. The Burlington and South-western road from Burlington to St. Joseph will be completed in the present year, which, in connection with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road, will form almost an air line from Chicago to St. Joseph. The importance of this connection to the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD can hardly be overestimated. With this connection, therefore, the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad will form by far the shortest route from California to St. Louis and Chicago, and consequently by the great network of railroads centering in those two cities, it will also be the shortest route to all points west and east reached by rail. This will naturally divert to the road a very large portion of the through business between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. By an act of Congress the Pacific railroads are expressly prohibited against discriminating in favor of any particular connecting roads, under the penalty of a forfeiture of their charters. It is clear, therefore, that nothing can prevent the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD from absorbing a large share of the constantly increasing business between the Pacific slope and the Western, Middle and Eastern States. The local business of the road will be heavy from the start, as the country between the St. Joseph and Fort Kearney is already well populated; in many parts densely so. Many important cities and towns are situated on the line of the road, which passes through the productive rolling prairie lands of Kansas and Nebraska. Large amounts of grain and other produce are annually raised in this section, which the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD will have to transport to market, and in turn bring back merchandise and other supplies which the people draw from the East. The success which has attended that portion of the road now in operation is positive evidence of the great extent of this local traffic.

THE ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY, in addition to all the above elements of success, has a land grant of 1,500,000 acres of the finest farming lands in the West. These lands are being constantly taken up by actual settlers, and the fertile sections of Kansas and Nebraska—in which these lands are situated—are now the favorite settling ground of emigrants and our own people from the East. Advices from Scotland, Germany, and other European countries, announce that during next Spring and Summer large colonies of thriving and industrious farmers from these countries will settle along the line of this road. By this operation the lands of the Company will increase greatly in value, and enable the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD to take its place with the Illinois Central Railroad as another remarkable success of land-grant roads in the Western country.

We are now offering the remaining balance of the 8 PER CENT. GOLD (INTEREST AND PRINCIPAL) FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND LAND GRANT BONDS OF THE ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY, WESTERN DIVISION, at 97½ and accrued interest in currency, but receivable at par and accrued interest in payment for lands. The interest account is made light for the Company through the operation of the sinking fund created from sales of the Company's land, which, in many cases, draw interest at the rate of ten (10) per cent. per annum. The Bonds are a first and only mortgage on the property, franchises and land grant of the Company. They combine a perfect security, with the highly-desirable features of a long loan and a liberal rate of interest—having thirty years to run, and bearing 8 per cent. gold interest per annum, payable semi-annually, with the principal also payable in gold. THE FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY are trustees for the bondholders, and use the proceeds of the land sales to retire the Bonds, which can be purchased for the sinking fund up to 115. This operation must eventually cause a great appreciation in the market value of the Bonds.

In recommending this Loan with our unqualified endorsement, we would call attention to the fact that upon the amount remaining unsold, the Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time and without notice; and we would further direct the attention of the investing public to the important fact that the Bonds of the EASTERN DIVISION OF THE ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY, bearing 8 per cent. interest, have never sold, as low as the subscription price since they were all placed, having been marketed by our firm at 97½, and are now quoted at 104½ to 105½. When the present loan is closed and the Bonds are placed on the Stock Exchange list, there is every reason to expect that they will appreciate in value to the standard of the 8 per cent. Bonds of the Michigan Central and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Companies, which securities now command higher prices than any other Railroad bonds in the United States.

The New-York Times,

DAILY, WEEKLY AND SEMI-WEEKLY.

This journal is now thoroughly identified with the greatest political necessity of the hour—uncompromising warfare against all forms of corruption, whether in national or local government. For years past the TIMES has been exposing the demoralizing schemes of self-interested politicians, and its recent warfare upon the Tammany Democrats has been received with universal approval. It has adhered to the pledge given in its original prospectus, more than twenty years ago, that the public should be truly represented, and their interests faithfully guarded through its columns. Its record has been pure and honorable, and the highest aim of its proprietors is to render it more and more worthy of its past history, and of the confidence which the public reposes in it. Two out of three of the original proprietors still direct its policy, and guide it on all public questions. They purpose that the TIMES shall continue to keep clear of all narrow and unworthy influences and cliques, and aim to represent the great body of the public, as distinguished from personal factions. It occupies a perfectly independent position, and is free to speak the truth on all subjects and about all men. Its greatly increased circulation throughout the country adds to its power and influence. It will continue to be a faithful exponent of Republican principles, and advocate with untiring energy every cause which tends to further the welfare of the people.

The utmost care will be devoted to gathering political news from special sources during the Presidential canvass. This department of the paper will be unusually full and trustworthy. Renewed enterprise will be exhibited in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the Semi-weekly edition; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings at the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

Whether we are to have a serious difficulty with Spain, or not, depends entirely on Spain herself. Although we have the greatest soldier of the age at the head of the Government, it is a peaceable Government—a Government which has done much to avoid strife, both now and in future times. But Spain has chosen to assume a menacing attitude—she resents the sympathy which our citizens naturally feel for Cuba, and she is disposed to "read us a lesson," which we are not prepared to receive. When foreign Powers are in the temper which Spain is now showing, some of their more reckless subjects are not unlikely to be betrayed into a course which at once calls for stern measures. Our Government is doing nothing more than making those proper preparations, which, if it neglected, might invite insult, and render it amenable, as our Washington correspondent truly says, to the anger of the people. That is the only meaning of the naval and military movements now going on. Assuredly, nothing will be done here to provoke hostilities with Spain; but it may be desirable for Spain to understand that it is not wise on her part to provoke hostilities with us.

Probably a more violent and undignified communication has never been addressed to the Executive of the United States than the telegram of Gov. WARMOUTH, of Louisiana, to the President. It charged the gravest offenses on certain officials, insultingly connecting the term "your appointees" with the accused parties, and that not once only but repeatedly, and it declared that if the course of those "appointees" was not changed, "anarchy and bloodshed would result." The reply of Gen. GRANT was a simple direction to the Attorney-General to make an investigation immediately into the Governor's report, which he contents himself with designating as of an "extraordinary character." The dignity and directness of the reply are the more striking in contrast with the insolent tone of WARMOUTH's communication, when it is remembered that the latter's own reputation for the worst excesses of usurpation and corruption is notorious. Meanwhile, the Federal troops in the City of New-Orleans are held entirely aloof from the contending factions, and will interfere only to put down violence with which the authorities show themselves unable to deal, and on proper requisition.

The Murder of Fisk.

The fact that JAMES FISK, Jr., is removed from the field of public life would not be in itself a subject for much regret, if the manner of his removal had been less shocking. People generally are not yet prepared to admit that they are living in an utterly lawless state of society, where the private vendetta may safely be substituted for the ordinary processes of justice. Whatever offenses JAMES FISK may have committed against the community—and we, certainly, have never extenuated them—it must be admitted that assassination is not the right way of exacting retribution. It is nearly time to have the question settled once for all whether the crime of deliberate murder is punishable or not in this City. It is no excuse for STOKES that FISK was a very bad man. If it is once to be recognized as a settled rule that any man who dislikes another is at liberty to take a pistol and shoot his adversary in cold blood, the ruffians of the community will very soon have everything their own way. The course of justice in reference to murder has been such, of late years, as to strengthen the belief that it is not at all difficult for the murderer to escape the proper penalty of his crime. FOSTER, who killed Mr. PUTNAM with a car-hook, was able to get Judge PRATT to interfere so effectually for him that he is still practically unpunished. Too many similar cases will at once occur to the reader's recollection. If STOKES had felt quite sure that he would be required to expiate his crime on the scaffold, he would probably have changed his mind about killing FISK on Saturday.

It is desirable on many grounds that simple justice should be done in this case. We must make it generally understood that people cannot be allowed to take the law into their own hands. We have never been admirers of FISK, and even his dreadful end cannot lead us to take a more favorable view of his career than we have done before. But to murder him was as much a crime as if he had been the most honest man in the community, and unless we are prepared to concede that our statutes are so many shams, and that the framework of society is broken up, the assassin must meet the fate which the law prescribes. As for FISK himself, it is not unreasonable to remember just now that, but for the assistance he received from many highly-respectable men, his power for evil would have been much reduced. It is difficult, for instance, to overestimate the value of the aid he derived from Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD. Without the advice of that able lawyer, he could not possibly have kept his head above water during the past two years. The entire blame of FISK's misdeeds does not rest on his own shoulders. Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD must take a part of it—and history will probably assign to him a very large part. FISK himself was an ignorant man, unversed in the ways of the law; in Mr. FIELD he found an adviser who was competent to supply him with just the kind of assistance and knowledge which he most needed, and by which alone he was enabled to keep his ground. The pistol of STOKES has deprived Mr. FIELD of his most profitable client, while it gives him an opportunity of revising his peculiar theories about the duties and privileges of lawyers.

We shall probably be thought very "eccentric" if we suggest a reflection which must have occurred to many minds yesterday—namely, that the "old-fashioned" theory (as some people call it) about guilt bringing with it its own punishment, receives a startling illustration in the events of the past year. There are not a few persons in the world who think that we are too much advanced in knowledge to believe that there is any power in the universe greater than that which we create ourselves, or which is tangible enough to be touched, and that all human circumstances are the result of accident or chance. Yet the events of the past year might well disturb the conclusions of these philosophers. The man of whom FISK was one seemed to be as strong that nothing could shake them. They had wealth and power unlimited; they altered laws to suit themselves; leaders of society bowed down before them. The world had nothing more to offer them. But to the astonishment of all men, and as it were in a moment, the whirlwind descends upon them, and they are swept away. Their wealth is gone; their names are become a by-word; some of them are vagabonds on the face of the earth; others go in dread of the felon's jail; others perish, in the bitter language of SWIFT, like poisoned rats in a hole. We say again that it is an amazing spectacle, and though some may continue to assert, "It is all chance," and cry out, "There is no God," there are others who will be inclined to take a different view of it, and to go back to the simpler faith of earlier years—that, somehow or other, explain it how we will, the sin of every man finds him out, and the Divine laws are put into execution, whether we choose to acknowledge their existence or not. If anybody says that this is stale preaching, we can only reply that it is preaching which is not altogether superfluous in these days, and which derives a memorable force from the events of the past few months.

The People and the Legislature.

There are three bills now pending before the Legislature on which the honest people of this City, without distinction of party, desire prompt and favorable action. They embrace only such legislation as is absolutely necessary to carry on the work of reform, and protect the interests of the people, pending the adoption of a new charter for the City. One of them—introduced in the Senate by Mr. BENEDICT—is a bill to enable Controller GREEN to meet the immediate financial obligations of the City, and thereby save its credit at home and abroad, and at the same time to give him such control over the swarms of Tammany office-holders, who cannot be displaced under the present charter, as will prevent the further robbery of the Treasury by sinecure place-holders and bogus claimants. Another of the bills—introduced by Col. HAWKINS in the Assembly—is merely an enabling act, designed to secure to the people the benefits of the action of the only honest and fearless Grand Jury that they have yet been able to impanel, and to give the public an opportunity to bring the robbers of the City Treasury to a speedy criminal trial. The third bill—introduced by Mr. TWOMBLY—is intended to relieve the City Government of the incubus of three prominent officials—Mayor HALL, Corporation Counsel O'GORMAN and Corporation Attorney TOM FIELDS, all intimate associates and active leaders of the late thieving Ring, and to fill their places with honest men, who are in sympathy with the Reform movement which, in this City at least, was the only issue involved in the November election.

That these bills, or either of them, should encounter the opposition of any man in the Legislature, Republican or Democrat, except the four or five members of the Assembly from this City who were elected by Tammany Hall, may well excite surprise in the minds of honest men of all parties. As for the Republicans in the Legislature who, being largely in the majority, will be responsible for its acts, we tell them plainly that they cannot afford, either as Republicans or as citizens, to be instrumental in defeating these or any other measures of Reform that the reputable citizens and tax-payers of this City shall deem essential to their interests and safety. If any party is to assume the task of bolstering up, even temporarily, the tottering fortunes of the Tweed dynasty, let it be the party that has for years acknowledged him as its leader, and submitted to his vulgar sway, and not the party which the people have just installed in power for the express purpose of overthrowing his corrupt rule. The Tammany Republicans of this City and their allies, the Fenton Republicans of the interior, may have arrived at that point of desperation where they are ready to join hands with the publicly-branded thieves of the "Ring," with a view to participation in the spoils of office, and the gratification of their revenge in the coming Presidential campaign; but, if so, we trust that there will be honest Democrats enough in the Legislature to make up for their defection, and secure such legislation for this plundered Municipality as the people demand. The alliance with the expiring Tammany Ring, by whomsoever it is made, will be short, and will be the certain political death of the party or faction that makes it. If the followers of REUBEN E. FENTON in the rural districts, or the followers of HORACE GREELEY in the Metropolis, think it a safe bargain, let them try it. It will only confirm the truth of all that has been alleged against them.

With regard to the three bills now awaiting the action of the Legislature, it should be borne in mind that they are intended only as temporary measures of relief, to aid the work of Reform, until a new charter is agreed upon. The objection urged against them, that they confer too much power upon Controller GREEN, certainly ought not to have any force with the Democrats in the Legislature, since Mr. GREEN is, and always has been, a Democrat. The effect would be merely to transfer power from one set of Democrats, who have been proved to be thieves, to another Democrat who is known to be honest. It is easy to see why TOM FIELDS and his half dozen Tammany colleagues in the Assembly should oppose the bills, but the Democratic Party of the State can hardly expect to gain anything at this late day by adhering to the fortunes of TWEED, HALL, O'GORMAN & Co. The Democratic journals strove hard to prove, during the last election campaign, that TWEED did not control the Rochester Convention. If the Democrats in the Legislature now vote against the Reform measures of their own party, it will go far to prove that he not only controlled the Convention, but that he controls the party in the Legislature.

Objections to the bills coming from Republican members of the Legislature are equally groundless, since the power that it is proposed to put in the hands of Mr. GREEN is already in the hands of Democrats, and will remain there, in case the bills are defeated, until the adoption of a new charter. Republicans have nothing to lose by the change, unless, indeed, they be Tammany Republicans who share in the sinecure offices which Mr. GREEN desires to abolish. The places now held by HALL, O'GORMAN and FIELDS might or might not be all filled by Democrats; but, in any event, the Republican Party could not be worse off than it is now. They would at least be filled by honest men, and this of itself would be advantageous to the Republican Party, as well as the people, and a Republican Legislature could claim the credit of having effected the change. In whatever aspect the question may be viewed, it is clear that an alliance of any party, or any faction of a party, in the Legislature to defeat the bills now pending there, would be regarded as in the interest of the corrupt Tammany "Ring," now so nearly crushed, and would arouse the indignation of every honest man of both parties in this City. Let no Republican who regards either his own reputation, the welfare of his constituents, or the interests of his party, be seduced into any such alliance under any pretext whatever.

Facts About the Custom-House.

Every consideration urges the Senate Committee of Investigation to make thorough work with the charges brought against the New-York Custom-house. We hope they will not be discouraged by the meagre results of the examination of Mr. GRESLEY, who has been a very noisy accuser, nor by the excessive poverty of Mr. A. T. STEWART's "available information," from pushing their inquiry to the utmost. We especially hope that they will follow up the clues said by one witness to be in the possession of District-Attorney NOAH DAVIS and Secretary BOUTWELL, both of whom are represented as having obtained specific information touching frauds in certain branches. For specific information in something fortune has denied to the witnesses the Committee has so far found, albeit, they were chosen from among those most ready to circulate stories of alleged misconduct.

Here was Mr. A. T. STEWART, for example. This gentleman was quoted in the Senate as authority for the existence of the most high-handed outrages on the merchants of New-York. These outrages, it was declared, were continued after Collector MURPHY had been addressed concerning them by the Secretary of the Treasury—continued, therefore, according to the logical and ingenuous Senator SUMNER, by a "power behind the throne." This important witness, when called on to give facts and not opinions, finds himself with as poor a stock as if some rival had caught him "short" and made a "corner" in them. The outrages he had alleged have never, he confesses, put him to extraordinary inconvenience and expense; though he receives one-tenth of the imports at New-York. The General Order system, of which he specially complains, was established under Mr. GRINNELL, and not under the well-abused MURPHY; and the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury was addressed to Mr. GRINNELL, and not to Mr. MURPHY. This latter fact seems to have taken Mr. STEWART very much aback when he was shown the remonstrance referred to, and to have made him give vent to the desire not to be bothered with questions, but to be allowed to state his opinion that the General Order business was "an outrage in general terms." This was a natural wish with a witness whose supply of evidence was very much below the demand.

But, we repeat, we hope the Committee will not be discouraged by the results thus far from following the investigation with uncompromising vigor. Whatever basis of fact there is for the charges of corruption and mismanagement so freely circulated should be brought to light. If it is substantial, the country is entitled to know it, and to have the abuses removed. If it is not any more substantial than the wretched failure of the witnesses so far would seem to imply, the country is entitled to know that as well. It will be perceived that the Committee, in pursuance of this end, have avoided even the appearance of want of earnestness by yielding to the senseless clamor for them to hold their sessions elsewhere than in the Custom-house, and will meet hereafter in Room No. 14 Astor House. This is a concession which those demanding it are bound to show was worth while, by producing the clouds of witnesses from among our merchants who were too timid to appear in the Custom-house. It was not very complimentary to the average character of our importers to assert that they did not dare to tell the story of their wrongs before a Committee of the United States Senate, because the men who are alleged to have committed them were in the same building. But we shall expect the authors of the aspersion to show that it was a just one, by introducing to the Committee the shy possessors of those facts with which Messrs. GRESLEY and STEWART were so badly provided.

Civil Service Reform in the City.

It is understood that the Subcommittee, chosen by the "Seventy" to draw up a new charter, had for some time under consideration the introduction of competitive examinations into all branches of our City administration. The Governor also in his message speaks of the desirability of a more fixed tenure of office in the subordinate officials, so as to secure greater responsibility and higher skill. The want felt by all in the administration of this City, is evidently of honest and well-trained officials. Is this want to be supplied by the charter which the Committee of Seventy have presented? We have our doubts. It is true that the new Board of Aldermen, to be elected under it, will be a far superior body of men to any we have ever had in the governing assembly of our City. The intelligent minority will undoubtedly have in it a most able and vigorous representation. All the representatives of both parties will feel the "ground swell" of reform which has recently moved the whole people. The various departments will for a year or two enjoy the services of honest and energetic men as Commissioners; and for a time, the public service will be reformed. But how long is this to continue?

What is there in the new political system proposed to provide a check to the old drift of affairs? How can an honest and able Government be secured by machinery? This is the question the Committee ought to have answered. They have had an unequaled opportunity to open a better era in New-York political administration, and they should have been willing to adopt and recommend any remedy, however "radical," if they could thereby insure us for the future—the true object of all government—greater security, order and honesty of public management, and consequent prosperity to individuals. As we have often said, the safeguards they have recommended against peculation of the public moneys, and the scheme of minority representation, are remedies of this nature, which will tend to expel disease in the body politic, even when the intelligent classes are indifferent to the management of their municipal affairs.

Another most effective remedy and a check against corruption would be an enforced system of competitive examination of all municipal officers, below the highest, and a fixed tenure of office during good behavior, with power of removal by some controlling authority, "for cause." One-half of the rottenness of administration which has disgraced this City, has been due to the fact that men like TWEED, and HILTON, and HALL could fill all the thousand petty offices under their control with their ignorant and unprincipled tools. They acted as the gladiators did for the Roman demagogues, and defended and urged their master's claims among the ignorant plebeians, or fought for them against more honest competitors. They were bought and sold like cattle. It was through them, bribed by the places under the Board of Public Works, that TWEED was his ten thousand majority recently for the Senate. As a general thing, they know absolutely nothing of their duties. If, for instance, they are contractors for street-cleaning or pavement-laying, they either stand by with hands in pockets, and indifferently watch the lazy performances in our public places to which we are so much accustomed, or they farm it out to be half done by jobbers even more ignorant and lazy than themselves.

Our streets are a standing instance of the efficiency of the former civil service of the City. Other departments, however, are equally bad. They are full of dishonest and incapable men, and all of us who are private citizens are inconvenienced every day of our lives by this incapacity and inefficiency of the civil service of the City. A competitive examination, as to character and ability, of all officials below the highest and above the day laborers, would remedy much of this evil, because it would take out of the hands of Ward politicians these thousand petty appointments, and place them in a Board of intelligence and character, who would appoint from examination. If the United States Government, who have always had far superior officials to our City place-holders, could attempt this reform with their subordinate officials, why could not our City Administration, under the Reform Charter?

A Suggestion for the Dock Commissioner.

It is rumored about town that Mr. JOHN T. AGNEW, the eminent tobacconist, is meditating the question of resigning his position as Dock Commissioner. He has held the place only—as he told us the other day—because of a disinterested desire to serve the public, and now retains it simply from a like disinterested desire to continue that inestimable service. The resignation of Mr. WILLIAM WOOD's "genial" friend SMITH, however, has suggested to him the possibility that in the present state of public opinion even his resignation would not be regarded as occasion for universal mourning. Meanwhile, pondering this delicate question, Mr. AGNEW has compromised so far as to take down the magnificent portrait of TWEED, which has hitherto overlooked his luxurious Ingersoll desk. It is a profound question of ethics, too deep for our present solution, whether that rash act of the President of the Dock Commission is after all worthy of commendation. Its commission perhaps involved ingratitude to a fallen patron. Et tu, Brute! might not our late pinchback Cæsar exclaim when informed of the fact? However, the portrait no longer hangs in the President's room, and we fancy we are not called upon in the interests of either art or morals to bewail its relegation to the dirt-heap of the Dock Commission.

But Mr. AGNEW must be aware that this sacrifice to public opinion is not comprehensive enough to satisfy it. There are many reforms yet to be introduced into the Board of which he is President. Getting rid of SMITH was unquestionably a proper thing to do, and the substitution of the legal experience and accurate knowledge of the dock question brought in by Mr. School Commissioner WOOD's relative, Mr. JOHN GRANVILLE KANE, was well enough; but how do they propose to demonstrate that the inefficiency with which we have charged them, and their connivance with the manipulations of the pay-rolls in Tammany interest, are consistent with the character for energy and respectability which this Commission pretended to claim? They had a meeting on Friday, but we get no reports of resolutions offered, fiery or otherwise, from Mr. WOOD, or any definite action whatever as to the work they have in hand. Perhaps, after all, the best thing these Commissioners can do is to promptly resign in a body. If they do not do that, they may at least be prompted to turn over a new leaf and justify their office; for they are honorable men, as we all know, and it would be a pity for them to retire with a blemished official record.

Cheap Dinners.

The other day there died at Paris a man who may justly be regarded as a benefactor of his kind. Next to the charity which feeds gratuitously hungry poverty, must be ranked the practical philanthropy which furnishes to the impecunious epicure a well-cooked dinner at a moderate price. This was M. DINOCHAU's peculiar merit, and Parisian writers and artists, always gourmands and seldom rich, will have reason to mourn his death. In a dingy little wine-shop, on a corner of the Rue Navarin, in the Quartier Breda, this excellent man was wont to serve a table d'hôte at thirty sous, which, in the good days before the war, is said to have been very much better than the five-franc dinners of the great hotels. Judging from some of our own more pretentious hostelries, it is not at all incredible. This ridiculously cheap repast was cooked and served by M. DINOCHAU's mother, while M. DINOCHAU himself attended to the wines, which were proportionately good and cheap.

To this famous retreat resorted many of the most famous personages in Paris. Artists, poets, and wits, whose names are now of world-wide celebrity, met at M. DINOCHAU's table, and not infrequently, we may well believe, waxed mellow over M. DINOCHAU's vin bleu. "The evening seldom finished without songs," says a correspondent of the London Daily News, "and I have heard at DINOCHAU's a first tenor of the opera." Here, too, before he had made his reputation, might have been seen GUSTAVE DORÉ, "playing the violin with the skill of a PAGANINI," to the admiration of the fair frequenters of the place, who affectionately styled him "Mon petit GUSTAVE." In all this brilliant company it not seldom happened that many of the guests found themselves without even the requisite thirty sous. But M. DINOCHAU's benevolence was equal to that tax also, as may be inferred from the fact that the bulk of his property at his death was found to consist of about $25,000 in book debts for just such indulgences.

M. DINOCHAU, however, it may be conceded, pushed his generosity to the verge of recklessness. A man who supplies a good dinner at thirty sous ought not be expected to give credit. Probably if M. DINOCHAU had been more human and less humane, he would have died a comfortable rentier. Such a possibility shows as more vividly a fact, of which most are sadly conscious, the enormous extortions put upon us here in what are called first-class hotels and restaurants. But even here we are making progress in M. DINOCHAU's direction. The height of civilization may be said to have been reached in any place which combines, in the matter of well-dining, the two extremes of extravagance and economy. Long since New-York attained the former point, and gradually it is coming to the latter. Indeed, this is one of the features in which its alleged likeness to Paris is becoming most pleasantly prominent. Even now there is, and has been for some time past, in a little cellar on one of the Eastern avenues, an establishment very similar to the wine shop of the Rue Navarin, and frequented by much the same class of people. For forty cents may be had there a table d'hôte dinner, which if not equal to DELMONICO's choicest menu, is still well cooked and savory, and twenty cents more will procure a pint of claret, not of the premier cru, certainly, but as good as the ordinary of many hotels. All over the City, too, are multiplying table d'hôtes of a more pretentious order, where, at prices varying from seventy-five cents to a dollar and a half, a good dinner may be had, including a half bottle of wine. DELMONICO will remain unexcelled; but his humbler rivals have a field of their own.

Even now it may almost be said of New-York as of Paris that one may live here, with comfort, as cheaply or as expensively as one desires. And when the experiment of apartment houses has become an established and systematized success, and the efforts of our vine growers have given us good wines at reasonable prices, New-York will be found as pleasant a residence as any in the world for epicures with modest incomes.

MINOR TOPICS.

The announcement made by Rev. GEORGE H. HEPWORTH, of the Thirty-fourth-street Unitarian Church, that he had concluded to enter an "orthodox" denomination, is an event which had been for some time anticipated. Mr. HEPWORTH frankly declared that he found "the radical theology" of some of his fellow-ministers, and the extent to which the society generally accepted it, intolerable to him, an avowal which he has made in substance many times before. It was a conclusion quite in accord with the bent of his mind, which was as little at home among the more advanced Unitarians as that of WEISS or SAMUEL LONGFELLOW would be among the orthodox believers.

Mr. LEWIS, the managing editor of the Evening Post, testified before the Custom-house Investigating Committee, that GORDON L. FORD, Ex-Collector of Internal Revenue of the Third District of this State, was removed from office because he refused to submit to an extortionate assessment for party purposes. The truth is, Mr. FORD was not removed at all for any cause. The First, Second and Third Revenue Districts were consolidated, and Mr. FORD, of the Third, and Mr. WILLETT N. HAWKINS, of the First, were left out of office by such consolidation—the Collector of the Second District, Mr. JAMES FERRELAND, being retained as Collector of the consolidated district. This piece of testimony was about the only definite thing the Committee could get out of Mr. LEWIS—and, like most of Mr. GRESLEY's statements that were not based on imagination or hearsay—it turns out to be erroneous.

Much has been said of Gen. GRANT's "nepotism," but most of these sayings are foolish, and consequently have no weight with the public. We have, however, come across a paragraph in the Detroit Post which is what Mr. Swiveller would have called a "staggerer," and in common justice we give it as it stands:

"The New-York Sun has at last 'got' the President on a charge of nepotism. It declares that one WILLIAM SWEETZER holds a clerkship in the office of Internal Revenue Collector, at Pittsburg, Penn.; and the said WILLIAM is a brother of Gen. J. B. SWEETZER, who is a cousin of the father-in-law of the President's cousin.' That settles it. A President who would do that is, certainly, the original Jacobin of nepotism. Besides, we have learned of a still worse case in this State. The President has appointed to the office of Postmaster in Michigan a man who is second cousin to a woman whose first husband was uncle to the next-door neighbor of the sister-in-law of the washerwoman who ironed Lieut. GRANT's society shirt when he was one of the officers stationed at the fort in this city. These facts can be proved by indisputable testimony; and anybody who doubts has our permission to prove them. Can nepotism go further?"

France is nearer by one step to a repetition of the fatal blunders of a seizure by its National Assembly of powers which do not belong to it. The Committee on the Constitution have made a report against an appeal to the people to settle the form of Government, and in favor of the present Assembly assuming the business of forming a Constitution. The basis of the proposition is that it will be better to avoid the danger of violence resulting from a popular vote; but a Government which pretends to be popular, and shuns the danger attending a popular vote, will gain none of the advantages that flow from it, and a Constitution set up by the present Assembly will be only a butt for the attacks of the radicals, and can be sustained only by those repressive measures which have heretofore invariably resulted in revolution.

It now seems that we may be treated to a slight difficulty on the Mexico border. The Mexican cattle-thieves have been given to getting across the Rio Grande with their prey, to the great chagrin of our officers, who have had to watch them almost helplessly, owing to the small force at their command. These officers now ask our Government to try to get permission from the Mexican Government to follow these marauders on to Mexican soil. This, however, it might be difficult for the central Mexican Government to give with any surety that it would be useful, and any attempt to pursue the thieves across the river would be pretty sure to result in blood-letting somewhere.

Among the combinations against Erie which the sudden death of FISK will not weaken, is one to repeal the legislation in favor of that corporation obtained in New-Jersey within three years. It seems that the plunderers of the road have secured extraordinary legal opportunities for overcharges on their local New-Jersey traffic, as well as exemption from taxation on milions of property. These immunities are threatened with assault by a party in the Legislature, led by THOS. D. HOXSEY, of Paterson, and, according to a correspondent whose letter is published elsewhere, the prospect of success is good.

For a good many years VICTOR HUGO's influence in French politics has resulted not so much from what he has said or done, as from what he might do or say. To the last he preserves the character of a political scare-crow, and is now announced that his election by one of the Paris districts to the National Assembly will determine that body not to return to Paris. It seems strange that in a community like our own, accustomed to the exercise of full liberty, to think that the choice of HUGO as a representative should give Paris a worse name than the election of MORRISSEY to Congress, or Tweed to the State Senate, gives New-York. We should be apt to describe his constituency as fools and think no more of it.

We beg to acknowledge the following sums for the Children's Aid Society: R. L. 50; R., $5; "Business," (Pittsburg, Penn.,) $50; S. W. T., $1.

During the year just closed there were constructed in Minnesota some 600½ miles of railroad, divided among the several lines, as follows: Northern Pacific, 170; St. Paul and Pacific, main line, 72; Sioux City and St. Paul, 65; Hastings and Dakota, 30; Minneapolis and Duluth, 19; Minneapolis and St. Louis, 28; Chicago and St. Paul, 45; St. Paul, Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, 24; Winona and St. Peter, 25½. The total length of railroad now completed is 1,525½ miles, or one mile for every 360 inhabitants. By the end of 1872, it is expected that the railroad system of the State will be as nearly perfect as it is possible to make it. The great event of 1871 was the completion of the Chicago and St. Paul Railroad, which shortens the route between those cities by about sixty miles. Duluth, in time, promises to be the great railroad centre which Mr. PROCTOR KNOTT represented it to be in his celebrated "chaff" speech before Congress. The population of St. Paul, if we are to believe all that we hear, is growing at such a rapid rate that it must soon be the most populous city of the West. Altogether, Minnesota appears to have made substantial progress during the past year.

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

Some Questions.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Will you ask for answers to the following questions?

1. Have or have not the local School Boards agreed with the Central Board of Public Instruction?

2. Can any one prove that fifty-five men can or will do the duty required of the Commissioners of Education?

3. Will any one deny that the very first object of the Reformers should be to give us a practical agreement between the Boards, local and central, either by doing away with one (or both) as now related to each other or by making them independent?

4. Will some one discuss this plan: Elect seven School Trustees for each district. Let these seven elect a presiding officer who shall be a Commissioner of Public Instruction. QUERY.

SOME ANSWERS TO SOME QUESTIONS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

First.—The Central Board of Education has assumed too much power to admit of any agreement between it and the local Boards. The Central Board is entirely unable to perform the duties assumed. I therefore propose that the local Boards be made to perform the duties properly belonging to them, and I am in favor of a plan which will secure to the people uniformity and system in our schools.

Second.—When the Central Board consisted of forty-four members all the evils known crept in, and with fifty-five members one might guarantee to carry any measure profitable to himself and to the friends of one-third of the members. But putting this aside and treating the second question as unnecessary, such an unwieldy Board we can't have, we won't have. A large number failed before—a still larger one will fail in the future. But since it is proposed to relinquish to the local Boards their legitimate duties, we will not discuss this. Seven men will be sufficient to produce harmony of action in the main steps to be taken. They must be strong men—and I believe they would be under the system proposed—men fully capable of comprehending that they have nothing to do with broken windows and bad smells, but a great deal to do with poor trustees of local Boards, poor teachers, poor professors, mountebanks, charlatans, bad contracts, &c., &c. Men who will comprehend that we are Americans, with an American system. Men who will not be afraid of taking open and strong action against abuses. Will fifty-five do this? Never.

Third.—No one will deny that these Boards should be inter-dependent. (I see that "Query" must have meant this.)

Fourth.—I would gladly discuss "this plan" more fully if "Query" will go on and explain what would be done with the superintendent, inspectors, &c., &c. Would he make the superintendent also chief of the inspectors? If so, we would have a real corps of inspectors. Let us work for that. The chief inspector should be able to change the sub-inspectors from district to district at his pleasure. The reports of these gentlemen should be with no blanks prepared for the purpose, and no dodging should be allowed. This, we may be certain, would keep the Central Board well informed.

Does "Query" wish each Commissioner to preside over the local Board of his district, or to be but an ex-officio member of the local Board? Be careful not to work him too hard. Let us have another communication from "Query." He is clearly an "insider," and seems to have a real plan. FREE SCHOOL GRADUATE.

Declines the Honor.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Noticing my name in the TIMES of this date as elected a member of the General Committee for the Twenty-first Ward by the Tammany organization, I beg leave to decline the honor.

NEW-YORK, Sunday, Jan. 7, 1872.

The Sunday After Epiphany.

Yesterday was the first Sunday after the Epiphany. In every place of worship throughout the City the services were peculiarly interesting. In ritualistic churches the same illuminations and decorative accessories were observed as on the previous day. At Trinity, St. Ignatius, Christ Church, and all the others, there were large congregations, and at St. Patrick's Cathedral the several masses were well attended. The music here and at St. Stephen's was of the highest order and attracted many persons of other creeds. There was a solemn high mass and sermon at the Church of the Epiphany by Dr. BURGESS; Father MCGLYNN preached in the evening. The "forty hours' devotion" continued throughout yesterday, as it does through part of today.

Private Meeting of the Board of Assistant Aldermen—Mr. Finckney Nominated for President.

A caucus of the Republican and Reform Democratic members of the Board of Assistant Aldermen was held at the St. Nicholas Hotel on Saturday afternoon at 3½ o'clock. FRANCIS GEIS was in the chair, and NICHOLAS R. COMMON acted as Secretary.

Mr. COMMON was again nominated, but declined, and after some time Mr. CHARLES G. FINCKNEY was nominated, and that gentleman having accepted, was unanimously declared the choice of the meeting.

The Knight-Street Baptist Mission.

The first anniversary of the Knight-street Baptist Mission Sunday-school took place yesterday afternoon. In addition to the regular attendants of the school, a large number of strangers were present. After some remarks from the Superintendent, Mr. ARNOLD, and singing by the children, the "Jubilee Singers" sang some of their plantation melodies. Rev. MATTHEW HALE SMITH spoke for a short time, and after some more singing, a collection in aid of the Fisk University was taken up, and the exercises closed.

OUR STATE INSTITUTIONS—XV.

ROCHESTER, TUESDAY, Dec. 26, 1872.

Quietly basking in the supreme enjoyment of the glories of her Genesee Falls, and the traditional remembrance of that very self-squandering person—SAMUEL PATCH, who, in 1829, for the amusement of a gaping crowd and the few pennies which sought the inside of his itinerant hat, shuffled off this mortal coil by jumping over the Falls into the river—Rochester presents some peculiar and remarkable evidences not only of her own growth, but of the rapid and marvelous growth of the Great West.

Sixty years ago Rochester was unknown. A few years after she was constituted into a city, her staple trade had earned for her the name of the Flour City. And yet so continuous and unceasing has been the march of colonization, so quickly does change follow upon change, that the Flour City bids fair to be compelled to surrender her long-accorded title in favor of some of the great inter cities which have sprung up a thousand miles away, in what was in her youthful days an unknown wilderness of prairie.

It was only in 1803 that a certain Col. NATHANIEL ROCHESTER bought a tract of three hundred acres of land, the site of the present City of Rochester, but described by a member of the State Legislature in 1810 as "a God-forsaken place, inhabited by mosquitoes, visited only by straggling trappers, and through which neither man nor beast could gallop without fear of starvation or ague." But that man ROCHESTER was wise in his generation. He saw that the waters of the Genesee, hurrying on to a fall of ninety-six feet, could be diverted by means of mill-races, and he made to form as fine a water-power as the whitest of millers could possibly desire. And he bided his time. In 1812 two brothers named BROWN settled in the village and constructed a mill-race, still known, though enlarged, as Brown's Race. In 1814 HARVEY ELY built the old Red Mill; and though his first year's operations consisted in making a few hundred barrels of flour, he lived to make 80,000 barrels of flour from wheat grown by himself in the Genesee Valley. Had he been a Brigham Young, he might have perfected the compactness of the arrangement by consuming it all in his own family. But he was not, and so he shipped his flour in all directions, and obtained for Rochester flour a reputation unsurpassed by that of any other milling city in the world. Rochester made rapid progress as a city of mills, and soon acquired the proud commercial title which she still holds—the Flour City—though her greatness was undoubtedly contributed to indirectly by the splendid wheat-growing soil of the Genesee Valley.

But a change has come over the spirit of Rochester's dream, and she no longer occupies her old leading position among the flour markets of the country. This result is due to several causes, but more especially to two. In the first place, the Genesee farmers, led away from the paths of wisdom by the high market value of their wheat, did what only too many others have done before them, and what only too many others will continue to do after them till doomsday comes—they killed the goose which laid the golden eggs. They ignored the fact that the earth requires nourishment in order to be productive, just the same as a laborer requires bread and meat to enable him to go through his day's work. They plowed their land, they sowed their land, they reaped their land, and made money out of their land. They did everything with it but nourish it, and it became exhausted. One or two short crops were, with willing blindness to facts, set down to the debit of unpropitious seasons. Other excuses were sought for, and easily found, to palliate the next and more alarming falling off in quality, and then came that inevitable curse, the weevil; and Genesee wheat-growing was in dire distress and trouble. The farmers saw their fatal error when it was too late to repair it; the millers of Rochester became fearful of losing both their reputation and their trade. In their dilemma the millers took to grinding Western corn, the farmers to growing other crops.

Another, but unavoidable cause, the growth of the Western States, operated also very strongly against the prosperity of the Rochester flour trade. Forty or fifty years ago, before the great farming districts of the West were so thoroughly opened up as to give birth to great cities, Rochester did all the flour business. The farmers sent her their wheat, and bought such flour as they needed. But as Western grain markets were established one after another, and one beyond another, the wheat ceased to find its way to Rochester. Rochester had to go for the wheat, and the farmers bought their flour in their own market towns as they wanted it. Without their long customary supply of home-grown wheat, and without their old-fashioned Western flouring trade, the millers were soon driven into a more speculative business. They bought Western wheat at Chicago and Milwaukee, and exported the flour, not of the best grade, to Europe. The result might have been foretold. The business did not pay. Rapacious agents in New-York, heavy freights for both wheat and flour, commissions, insurance, and a hundred other charges, not only ate up all the profits, but often left a balance on the wrong side. Mills began to change hands, then to lie idle, and, finally, to be used for other manufacturing purposes; and millers began to fail. And this, too, at a moment when they appeared to be most prosperous, if extent of business is any criterion of prosperity. For a time the prospects of the flour trade looked gloomy, indeed, though they brightened after a while.

Happily for the millers, the Genesee farmers, four or five years ago, having replenished their exhausted lands, once more began to grow good wheat. The millers soon betook themselves to their old business of making none but the finest flour; much of it being used for home consumption in the State, the rest finding a ready market in the New-England States. Still, the glory of the Rochester flour trade seems to have permanently departed. Two more mills were last year converted to other purposes, another that was burnt has not been rebuilt, one of the largest was idle the greater part of the year, and the millers generally complain that the business is unprofitable. Of some thirty large mills that were formerly running, only fifteen are now in full operation, and the production is not more than one-half what it used to be. Mr. WHITNEY, who owns one of the largest mills, is also the proprietor of a very large elevator. He has a contract with the New-York Central Railroad, which runs into the premises, and every car-load of flour which leaves Rochester on that line passes through his hands. The shipments of flour from Rochester by this line for the past year were, according to Mr. WHITNEY's books, only 265,000 barrels. To this, of course, there is to be added the amount shipped over the Erie Railroad, probably about 70,000 barrels, and say 60,000 barrels retained in the City for local consumption. The total yearly production of flour at Rochester approximating 400,000 barrels for the year, in the course of which Mr. RICHARDSON, one of the leading mill-owners, told me he did not anticipate would be reached during the coming year. In this opinion he was borne out by another miller, who said that from circumstances which had come to his knowledge he thought that one if not two of the mills would shortly be converted to other manufacturing purposes. In fact, it seems more than probable that in the course of a very few years flour grinding will have dwindled down into the the mere providing of the wants of the townspeople.

But Rochester knows well how to adapt herself and her magnificent water-power to the times, and if she can't make flour she will make boots and shoes, steam-engines, machinery, edged tools, furniture, &c.; and then, when there is no longer a market for such productions, she will turn her hand to something else. Nature forbids that the water-power should lie idle; it is contrary to reason, then, to suppose that the mills will do so. Rochester already occupies a commanding position in the general manufacturing markets of the State.

The boot and shoe trade of Rochester is one of her great industries. In the aggregate it amounts to nearly $3,500,000, and gives employment to about 3,300 work-people. Deacon OREN SAGE was the pioneer wholesale manufacturer. He started in business in 1837, on State-street, at the north end of what is now Rochester's pride in the building and architectural line—Powers' Block. The business which he erected is still carried on by his son and two partners, under the style of PARCOST, SAGE & MORSE. The old gentleman did a splendid trade for those days. His son showed me today the balance-sheet and stock-taking inventory for the year 1837. The deacon's stock in trade on the 31st December was valued at $1,900. His son's, on the 31st December, 1870, was valued at $303,000, after a year's sale of $1,000,000. One item in the balance-sheet of 1837 was pointed out to me. It debits THURLOW WEED with a little bill of $3 62. The present firm employs 600 men and 100 women. They have 125 sewing-machines, some of them run by steam, constantly in operation in their factory, and turn out on an average about 9,000 pairs of boots and shoes a week. They ship great quantities to Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, and have a leading trade with Missouri, Kansas and Iowa. Their store is 212 feet deep, and the packing-boxes full of boots piled up to the ceiling in rows give it the appearance of a bonded tea warehouse. The firm for some time past have had little or no dealings with Chicago. Mr. SAGE told me that at the time of the fire they found, on reference to the books, that a small balance of $36 85 was all that was owing to them, and this has since been paid. "I did not like Chicago," he said; "trade was too heavy there to make it a safe risk. We have a very large connection with retailers, who buy our boots from $500 to $3,000 worth at a time, and sell them as their own make. That is a distribution of our eggs into many baskets, which is a system I prefer; and, of course, when I sell my boots I have nothing to do with what the buyer chooses to say about them."

The two other leading shoemakers are CHURCHILL & CO., of State-street, and J. T. STEWART & SONS whose factory stands on the East side of the river, a little above the Falls. These firms each do a business of about $500,000 a year, the latter confining themselves to the manufacture of women's shoes and gaiters. JESSE HATCH & SONS, of Front-street, also have a good business of $300,000. They manufacture women's fine shoes. Five or six other firms do a business of from $100,000 to $200,000 a year.

A walk down Mill-street, besides taking one among the flour-mills, also leads to some very large general manufactories. Among the more interesting is the factory of BARTON & CO., started forty years ago, and still in the same hands. Every description of edge-tool is made here by machinery, even to the most complicated and delicate of carpenters' tools. Some of the machinery is very elaborate, especially that which cuts the mortices of the plane-holders, and the lathes which turn the harder woods, such as box and lignum vitæ. The beech wood, of which the plane-holders are made, is sawn by machinery into the desired size when green, and is then put away to dry and harden for two years before it is worked up. The stock is consequently very large—always two years' consumption. In the stores there seem to be axes enough to fell all the forests in the world, and of a temper which would have delighted the professional souls of the executioners of old. The polishing-room is almost as good a display of fireworks as is to be seen in the back streets of New-York on the Fourth of July. As the metal is pressed against the revolving wheel the emery powder makes the sparks fly after the manner of a squib, although the wheel is only a wooden one, with a leathern tire. The firm have made coopers' tools one of their specialties, and have almost driven every other competitor out of the field. They are just now making a large lot of adzes for Cuba, and not infrequently furnish orders to England and other parts of Europe.

Immediately beyond BARTON & CO. is the steam-engine factory of WOODBURY & BOOTH. They make only two kinds of stationary engines, and always of the highest class of workmanship. Though having no patent, their engines are known as the Woodbury engines, in consequence of their superior make, and from the fact that the firm refuse all orders for any other description of engine. The marvels of machinery are to be seen at work here, iron planers, iron turning-lathes, drills, &c. The boiler factory is in the rear. I saw two or three boilers for 200-horse-power engines in process of being hammered. Men are certainly unskillful in prosecuting their enmities. The securing for a man the appointment of overseer in a boiler factory would be the refinement of cruelty. One hour of the companionship of these tendrous sledge-hammers, and their music, would be a sufficient infliction of revenge to pacify the bitterest spirit. This factory has been in operation over twenty years, employs 100 men, and sends out annually $300,000 worth of engines.

In the same street is the Judson's Governor Factory. This piece of mechanism is said to be the only effective steam-governor in the world. It is wonderfully and fearfully made, and defies description by the unlearned in its mysteries. But the machine-shops are most interesting; the most perfect in appliances and arrangement I have ever seen. They rise tier over tier, and the smallest of the parts of the governor, and they are innumerable, is made on its own particular machine. The great heavy iron balls which press down the valve in their revolutions are turned on an automatic circular turning-lathe with the precision and evenness of billiard-balls. Other machines, with powerful revolving cutters, shape the bars of metal as though they had been molded. All are of the most costly description, and Mr. JUDSON told me that his stock of tools alone cost him $70,000. Mr. JUDSON has made many very valuable improvements in his machinery since he first started his invention, always expending in this way a large portion of his annual profits. The result is that he has a perfect workshop, and commands orders from all parts, even Great Britain numbering herself among his customers.

A prominent feature in the trade of Rochester is the unusually large manufacturing business in furniture carried on by some firms. With the exception of New-York, no city in the State can compete with them. The business in its present extent is of comparatively recent date. About fifteen years ago Mr. P. M. BROMLEY, now one of the proprietors of the Osburn House, entered into partnership with Mr. HAYDEN as manufacturers of furniture, and seven years after organized the firm of BROMLEY, HUN & SMITH, Mr. HAYDEN continuing the old business. These two firms built up a large business, and were followed in their enterprise by a brother of Mr. HAYDEN's. The two older firms have each a business of about $600,000 a year, and employ from 250 to 300 men. JAMES E. HAYDEN & CO. make all kinds of household furniture, mattresses and spring beds, cornices and looking-glass frames, principally in black-walnut. Their sales reach $300,000 a year. C. J. HAYDEN & CO. make an enormous number of common chairs, for which they find a ready market in New-York and elsewhere. They also make all kinds of general furniture. BROMLEY, HUN & SMITH go most into upholstered furniture. Their twenty show-rooms are stocked with elegant cabinets and sets of furniture covered with richly brocaded silks and satins. Still they are equally ready to stock the poor man's house. Machinery is employed in the manufacture of every bit of the furniture when its use is possible, and table legs and chair rails are turned by the million.

NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

The Approaching Session—Railroad Contests in Prospect—Temperance and Education.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TRENTON, Saturday, Jan. 4, 1873.

The annual session of the Legislature of New-Jersey will commence at Trenton on Tuesday next. The Republicans having a clear working majority in both Houses, there will be no delay in effecting an organization. Mr. BRIDLE, of Camden, will be made President of the Senate, with Mr. JOHN F. BABCOCK, of the New-Brunswick Fredonian, as Secretary. In the House, the indications favor the selection of Hon. NATHANIEL NILES, of Morris County, as Speaker, and of Mr. SOMERSCHEN CREW, of the West Jersey Press, as Clerk. Mr. BRIDLE is in his sixth year as Senator, and has already served as presiding officer of the body of which he has been during his whole term of service a prominent and influential member.

THE NEW GOVERNOR.

One of the first events of the session will be the inauguration of JOSE. PARKER, the Governor elect, which will take place during the second week. Gov. RANDOLPH, who retires, has acquitted himself acceptably to the fair-minded men of both parties, having conducted his administration with reference rather to the interests of the people than to any merely partisan result. Gov. PARKER comes in under circumstances in every way favorable, being generally regarded as disposed to avoid partisan excesses, and as certainly above the reach of any influence hostile to the public good.

THE WORK AHEAD.

The legislation of the session will cover a great variety of subjects, but the railroad interest will, as usual, absorb an undue share of attention. Among the projects which will early apply for legislative sanction is that of the construction of a coal road from Easton, on the Delaware, to Perth Amboy, on Raritan Bay. This enterprise originates with ABA PACKER, who desires an all-rail route from his Pennsylvania mines to tidewater, in order that he may be independent of existing lines and able to defy all hostile combinations. Should a charter for such a road be framed, Mr. PACKER would establish a vast coal depot at Perth Amboy, whence shipments could be made all the year round, without interruption from ice or other obstructions. It is understood that the Pennsylvania Central, which now controls the Consolidated railroads of New-Jersey, will oppose this commendable project, but for what reason is is difficult to understand, since there can be no serious competition between any of their lines and that in contemplation. It is understood that the Pennsylvania Company will also oppose an application of the New-Jersey Central Road for authority to extend its Flemington branch to the Delaware River. This branch runs through Somerset and Hunterdon, two of the richest agricultural counties of the State, but its value is very much impaired by the fact that it has no westerly or southern connections, enabling it to reach the Delaware, or communicate directly with Philadelphia. Application for its extension has been repeatedly made to the Legislature, but owing to the opposition of the Camden and Amboy monopolists, it has been found impossible to obtain the necessary authority. This year the attempt is to be renewed, but will be again opposed on the ground that if the road is extended to the Delaware it will be able to connect with a road, for which a charter has been obtained, running through Bucks County, in Pennsylvania, to Philadelphia, thus forming a through route in opposition to the present New-York and Philadelphia line. Such would, very probably, be the ultimate result of the legislation asked for, but this is rather a reason why it should be granted than an argument for its denial. In the same connection it is rumored that another effort will be made to pass the Airline Railroad bill, which was defeated last Winter, and under which, if now passed, a direct line from Jersey City to Philadelphia would be immediately constructed, and so operated as to reduce the time between the two cities to two hours and a half.

BRIB.

Another feature of the session of the Legislature will be the agitation of the repeal of all the Erie legislation of the past three years. This Company, by the employment of "arguments" peculiar to itself, has been able, latterly, to obtain everything it asked for in that State, riding rough-shod over all considerations of public interest and private right. Last year it secured the passage of a law which practically exempts it from all penalties for overcharges, and it may now indulge in any extortions whatever without fear of being called to account. It has also had enacted certain laws in reference to the taxation of its property in Hudson County, under which it escapes assessment upon millions of dollars worth of depot, wharf and other grounds which are properly liable to tax. The whole amount of tax paid to the State, last year, by this immense corporation, was less than twenty thousand dollars. An effort is now to be made to repeal all this partial and vicious legislation, and the indications are that it will be successful, the managers being unable to make any combinations with the leaders of either party, which will be of real service in a sharp and aggressive conflict such as is foreshadowed. The movement against the corporation, or those rather who have stolen it from its rightful owners, will be headed by Gen. THOMAS D. HOXSEY, of Paterson, who has for years ranked as their most tenacious and vigorous opponent.

TEMPERANCE.

An earnest attempt will be made by the friends of temperance, during the legislative session, to procure the passage of a law requiring the people of every ward and township in the State to decide by ballot the question of license therein. A bill of this nature failed last year, but two or three applying to localities were passed, and have been found to work so beneficially that a general act will now command a much stronger vote than could then be obtained. The temperance men of the State are thoroughly and efficiently organized, and announce that they will strike down every man who refuses to give the people a chance to vote on this question.

THE SCHOOLS.

Another subject which will command attention is that of the revision of the educational system of the State. Under a joint resolution of the last Legislature a commission was appointed to examine the School laws of that and other States, and report a comprehensive act embodying the most approved features of all systems. This Commission, of which President CAMPBELL, of Rutgers College, is Chairman, and Mr. JOHN T. FORSYTH, an old journalist, is Secretary, have prepared and will submit a law which, if passed, will place New-Jersey, educationally, ahead of the most advanced States. It includes the local option-compulsory principle, authorizing the people of school districts to compel the attendance of truants and vagrants upon the public schools; prohibits the employment of children under twelve years of age in factories unless they have attended school for three months in the year; provides for a close inspection of schools by officers especially assigned to that duty; establishes the principle of competitive examination in connection with admissions to the Normal School, and embodies other features equally important and desirable. A separate act of the Commission provides for a system of high schools, while a third authorizes the institution of twenty-one scholarships—one for each county—in the colleges of the State.

It is obvious that the legislators will not wait for employment during the three months which they will spend at the State capital.

THE GOVERNOR'S SALARY.

Immediately after the organization on Tuesday the annual message of retiring Gov. RANDOLPH will be read, and a bill will be introduced to increase the Governor's salary from $5,000 to $6,000. This must be disposed of during the week, and prior to the inauguration of Governor-elect PARKER. The standing committees may also be announced, but no other business of interest will be transacted.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Fifth-Avenue Theatre.

"DIVORCE."

The success of the play called "Divorce," at the Fifth-avenue Theatre, is becoming quite phenomenal. It has reached its 150th representation, and during the last three nights people have been turned away from the doors. Its fame has spread far and wide through the land, and it is listened to nightly, not in New-York only, but in the precincts of the Great Lakes, on the prairie, and on the banks of the Mississippi. Challenging attention as an American comedy, by an American author, a comedy which has gained the unusual distinction—for such a work—of substantial success, it seems proper at this stage in its career to give "Divorce" some further examination.

"The essence of all jokes, of all comedy," says EMERSON, "seems to be halfness; a non-performance of what is pretended to be performed, at the same time that one is giving loud pledges of performance. The baulking of the intellect, the frustrated expectation, the break of continuity in the intellect, is what we call comedy; and it announces itself physically in the pleasant spasms we call laughter." The definition is, for the most part, justly applicable to "Divorce." But we must remember that Mr. EMERSON speaks here strictly of the comedy of laughter. In the comedy of manners we demand not "halfness" but wholeness; the complete form and color of truth, that is to say, as distinguished from either short-coming or burlesque. Now as a comedy of laughter "Divorce" is a success, and as a comedy of manners it is a failure. For the latter statement we will presently give reasons, discharging in the first place the task of accounting for the former. "Divorce," then, to begin with, is a very ingenious piece of dramatic patchwork. The author is not responsible for the plot which is taken from an English novel. He is, however, to be credited with not a little clever filling in and working up. Mr. DALY understands climax and uses his knowledge to good purpose. If unable to allow him much originality, we may candidly say that he has an eclectic adroitness in selection. Some of his figures are, to be sure, impossible. Both the lawyer and the detective of "Divorce" are of the number. Nothing could be more thoroughly un-American than either. The first is a cockney of the purest water, the second a grunting nondescript. But, whether true or false, Mr. DALY's puppets are generally doing something to attract attention. Their talk is glib, if not always elegant, and laughs come in quite often enough to please the veriest playgoing Democritus. There is, besides, much spirit in the situations, great finish, if not perfect taste, in the scenes and appointments, and infinite variety and flamboyant gorgeousness in the clothes. Mr. DALY, being his own manager, has, rightly enough, given his dramatic progeny every advantage of nursing and decoration. He has never been niggardly in mounting the works of others, and he can grudge for a moment this liberality to his own. Among the causes of the prosperity of "Divorce," current interest in the theme itself, and the chaotic or shifting opinions floating in the community touching the relations of sexes, are, of course, to be enumerated. It may properly be added to this that the actors are better suited to "Divorce," as it is than to "Divorce" as it might be. They are better adapted to a comedy of laughter than to a comedy of manners. Miss FANNY MORANT if more like an English than an American matron, is always a sterling artist, and if the style of Miss CLARA MORRIS is, on the other hand, too suggestive of the West, it is always energetic and intelligent. Miss DAVENPORT is too like a growth chamber-maid, but she excites merriment, and Miss DUEYE is never other than good, pretty and laughing. Mr. HAWKINS goes through his long part with vigorous and effective humor, and he is the author's most formidable rival, if he is "halfness" there is no equivalent in the representation as possible. Mr. LEWIS is brisk and amusing if not American, and Mr. DAVIDGE invariably pleases his audience. Mr. GERMON and Mr. WHITING do well in a hearty, old-fashioned style what is required of them and the inferior parts are neatly and carefully played. Taken altogether, estimated by ordinary standards and with the discrimination noted, the singular fortune of the piece may be said to be well deserved as it is reasonably to be accounted for.

If, however, we are to judge "Divorce" by the highest standards, it must be said that it falls far short of them. We are given to understand that it is a comedy of contemporaneous life. It is further intimated that it depicts life among what, to be intelligible, we must term the upper classes of American society. Starting from these premises, we are able, by comparison with recognized literary models and with such American society as in fact it is, to arrive at positive conclusions. The "School for Scandal" is one of the noted models. Waiving the question of its loftier art, its wit, its grace, its corruscating diction and its repartee, we confine ourselves to a consideration of its fidelity as a picture of manners. In this respect, apart from intrinsic evidence, we are met by irrefragable testimony. Lord BYRON and a host of competent witnesses testify to the accuracy of the delineation, no less than to its surpassing merit. Mr. SHERIDAN professed to depict scenes and characters among certain sections of the English higher classes, and he did so. He painted, in fact, men and women whom in real life he knew and mingled with. The same thing, with perhaps some modifications, may be said of "London Assurance." It is substantially true to the life. The same thing, again, may be said about Mr. ROBERTSON's comedies. "School," "Caste," and "War" are accurate representations of the individuals and habits they profess to copy. Now if we apply the same test to "Divorce," considered on its implicit claim to be taken as a picture of life among educated and refined people in America, what are we to say of it? We are forced to say that in this sense it is simply a caricature. We submit that the time has gone by for representing cultivated Americans in the absurd light wherein they are shown in "Divorce." It is not true that such Americans have the ridiculous manners and talk the uncouth jargon imputed to them in this play. It is not true that a pack of overdressed persons, most of whom talk slang, and some of whom talk remorselessly through their noses, fairly illustrate life in circles recognized as the "best," either in position or culture. We do not deny that there are circles wherein a young woman may address to another the statement that So-and-so "is awful mad at" her, or in which a young man may swagger into the company of ladies, and, with a fine blending of Broadway "sport" and Salon Shangle, accost an acquaintance with, "Why, old fel., how do you do?" We likewise freely admit that circles exist in which young females "admire" apple-sauce, and demand "them" potatoes, and ejaculate "that's so!" at every other sentence. If Mr. DALY thought proper to sketch such society we should not have the least objection, and should strive to give him full credit for success in so doing. But we do object to his giving us chalk for cheese, to his offering in a comedy professedly of typical cultivated and fashionable life, manners, talk, and proceedings generally, that suggest, if anything, the avowed parodies of the former days of Mr. HACKETT and Mr. DAN MARBLE. The women, especially, of "Divorce" are painfully out of drawing and sometimes insufferably vulgar. We own that this is not always the fault of the dramatist. We own, too, that these personages and their doings hugely please the mass of their audiences; but this affords no conclusive reason against pointing out why they should not do so.

There is some excuse and some explanation for all this. We feel bound to protest against the implication that a lot of mush, dandy shopmen and girdling or bickering milliners' apprentices—we, of course, speak of the characters, not the performers who sustain them—truly represent our best society; but it must be confessed, in extenuation of the playwright, that his blunder has been a natural one. The truth is that "Divorce" is a very tolerable photograph of the social vulgarisms and anomalies that have sprung out of political demoralization. The characters of "Divorce" are Tammany swells, humbugs and cheats; their pretended gentility, their exaggerated clothes, their wonderful English, and their preposterous way of being fine generally, smacks of the "Ring" and of the bogus fashionable society that has grown out of it. The whole thing is absurdly like "High Life Below Stairs," the unpleasant difference being that in the latter case you are implicitly in the secret of the pretense, and in the other you are expected to be wholly deluded. We dare say that in the glorious old days now past, when any loafers from corner groceries became millionaires in a week, persons like the "high-toned gentlemen" of "Divorce" might have walked about among silken and velvet furniture, have driven four-in-hand, and have ruffled among "leading" society with the best. But this phase was not only highly exceptional, but, as we have already partly seen, highly ephemeral; and consequently there is an obvious impropriety in taking it as broadly representative. This was precisely the mistake made by DICKENS in Martin Chuzzlewit, which was accordingly, as became its source, a book of laughter, or of pathos, if you will, but not a book of manners. But what we look for and perhaps condone in a foreign stranger we hardly expect in a native resident. If strangers from Europe go into the Fifth-avenue Theatre and accept "Divorce" on its profession to mirror American society of the choicer stamp, we assert that not only they, but ourselves, however amused, must also be disgusted, and this is, in fact, what has happened so often as to justify our strictures and disclaimers.

These remarks may seem harsh, but they are certainly made in no unkind spirit. If we are to have a national drama, a national comedy, it is absolutely indispensable that the Press should speak the truth of even the best-meant efforts in such a direction. Journalists are habitually beset by all sorts of arguments and appeals to gloss over the truth in such matters, to nurture histrionic art by the suppression of fact if not by the suggestion of falsehood. It is not, however, for the interest of the public, or of art, or even in the long run for that of managers, authors and actors themselves that such a course should be pursued. It is better that honest convictions should be expressed by those intrusted with such duty even at the cost of temporary pain. And, after all, any particular criticism only expressed the opinion of a single individual, and to such consolation as may be derivable from this circumstance the dissatisfied are fairly entitled.

MR. THOMAS' SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The first of the promised series of symphony concerts by Mr. THOMAS' orchestra takes place at Steinway Hall this evening. The programme, which we have already printed, is full of interest, and, we are sure, will be admirably interpreted.

The New-York Printing Company—Sale Postponed till Tuesday.

Mr. FANCHER, counsel for the Ocean Bank, appeared on Saturday in the Superior Court, Special Term, to show cause why the temporary injunction restraining the sale of the property of the New-York Printing Company should not be continued. Mr. ABRAHAM R. LAWRENCE appeared to argue in favor of sustaining the injunction, and asked for an adjournment until Tuesday next, which was granted by Chief-Justice BARBOUR.

The Paterson Murder.

Today the Coroner's Jury meet in Paterson to investigate the case of LIBBY GARRABRANT, who is charged with the murder of RANSOM F. BURROUGHS. Prof. DOREMUS has promised to lay before them the result of his analysis of BURROUGHS' stomach. The prisoner, LIBBY GARRABRANT, is too poor to employ counsel, and thus far none of the legal fraternity have volunteered to protect her against the outpouring of broken-hearted scorning to which she was subjected at the Coroner's inquest.

Appointment of Brother—Mr. Francis J. Palmer, of the Broadway Bank, Appointed Chamberlain.

Another of the Tammany office-holders has resigned. BRADLEY has followed the example of TWEED, CONNOLLY and SWEENY, by spending, on Saturday, his resignation as Chamberlain to the Mayor, in the following letter:

OFFICE OF THE CITY CHAMBERLAIN,
NEW-YORK, Jan. 4, 1873.

Hon. A. Oakey Hall, Mayor of the City of New-York:

DEAR SIR: On the 9th day of April, 1870, I had the honor to receive from you the commission to the high and responsible office of Chamberlain of the City of New-York. Since that time I have endeavored to faithfully discharge its duties and trusts. My official accounts show the disposition of all moneys intrusted to my care, and will be found to be in all respects accurate. I now most respectfully tender to you my resignation.

Thanking you for the courtesy you have at all times extended to me, I remain yours very respectfully,

JOHN J. BRADLEY,
Chamberlain of the City of New-York.

The Mayor issued a memorandum of the letter with a subjoined comment in which he spoks in the warmest terms of Mr. BRADLEY, as one who had ever been most honorable in his conduct and jealous of the interests of the City committed to him. The Mayor then appointed Mr. FRANCIS J. PALMER, of the Broadway Bank, to the vacant position.

In February Last a Son of Mine, Aged seventeen years, was attacked with Pleurisy. His breathing was laborious, a racking, painful cough developed itself, and he complained of severe pain extending from the arm-pit to the waist on the right side. As the readiest remedy within reach, I immediately administered nearly three tablespoonsful of Dr. JAYNE'S "EXPECTORANT," and applied JAYNE'S LINIMENT over all the parts affected, covering him up warmly in bed. In fifteen minutes he vomited, and was after wards easy for two hours. The pain in the side returning I gave him a smaller dose of the EXPECTORANT, and again used the LINIMENT which afforded him instant relief. On the morning of the 14th he was decidedly better, raising considerable phlegm with blood. Continuing with the EXPECTORANT the disease was entirely broken up in a day or two, and he was able to go about as usual. Knowing how prevalent and how often fatal these attacks of Pleurisy, and similar Lung Complaints are during the Winter in this section of the country, I gladly make known these facts, and at the same time express my entire confidence in the virtue of the remedies mentioned.—E. C. O. Hickens, Esq., Justice of the Peace, Elkin, Pulaski County, Illinois.

Brandreth Pills.
ESTABLISHED ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-ONE YEARS.
These vegetable and innocent pills should be in every house. Having them on hand gives them a double value, for then they nip the disease in the bud, often curing before a doctor could arrive. They are infallible in small-pox and all infectious or contagious diseases. No disease of this character can be propagated except there be those matters in the body on which it can rest and germinate. Even in Asiatic Cholera BRANDRETH PILLS are deemed an absolute specific by the first medical men in England and this country, and we have the proof in our possession that they are so, and to which hundreds of thousands of our best citizens are ready to certify. Let them be furnished by the rich to the poor, soon disease would be banished from our land. The wealthy could not invest their money better. That would be indeed laying up treasures in Heaven.
EXTRACT FROM A LETTER TO DR. BRANDRETH.
"If I am sick I know there are more or less unhealthy humors in my bowels or blood. To recover my health these must be got out, removed from my body. I have no fear of small-pox, cholera, typhus, yellow, bilious, scarlet or any other fever whatsoever. If I have a box of BRANDRETH'S PILLS near at hand. These pills I have used as my only medicine for over thirty years when sick from any cause, and they have always cured me quickly. I believe they remove the subject matter of disease from the body."
Thomas B. Hazard, who has written his valuable experience of BRANDRETH'S PILLS, and which may be had by application at Dr. Brandreth's office, No. 324 Canal-st., Brandreth Building, New-York, says: "Lately a friend of mine was sick in Newport, R. I. I recommended him to take BRANDRETH'S PILLS; but the patient thought they would not reach his case. I said I felt sure they would, and restore his health. He concluded to try one box. The box was finished in about a week, and patient reports 'no better.' Second box began and pills taken every day; before it was all used a change takes place; dark, pitch like matter was brought away from his bowels, and the health of my friend perfectly restored. If sick people would persevere for two or three weeks in the use of BRANDRETH'S PILLS they would become so well content of their efficacy that their own common sense would propel them to a final cure of their disease." BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold in every drug-store in the world. Observe B. Brandreth in white letters on the Government stamp, principal.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

During the week past no great activity has characterized the market, nor have the sales which have taken place been of special interest, although the attendance at the Exchange has been quite large on each business day, and real estate matters have been generally discussed. That business should have been brisk could hardly be expected during the first week of the year, for brokers are more actively engaged in arranging for sales which are to come off later in the season, while owners of property delay in bringing it forward until the status of the market is more clearly defined. The tone of the market, however, continues healthy, and the impression strongly prevails that a good business season is in prospect. The total value of City real estate sold at the Exchange for the week ending with Saturday, Jan. 6, amounts to $88,650.

THIS WEEK'S PROFORMA BUSINESS.

The auction sales projected for the present week are many of them of importance, as will be seen from the list appended, for, at the Exchange, property will be offered on the days noted as follows, by the auctioneers respectively named:

Today, Monday, Jan. 8, under three several Supreme Court orders, in foreclosure, GRATZ NATHAN, Esq., referee in each, Jos. McGUIRE will offer for sale: First, a plot of ground located on the north side of One Hundred and Thirty-eighth-street, 175 feet west of the Eleventh-avenue boulevard, running through to One Hundred and Thirty-ninth-street, in size 125 by 220.10, (excluding one-half the street not yet opened,) and embracing ten City lots; second, two lots on the south side of Sixty-ninth-street, 200 feet west of Eighth-avenue, together in size 50 by 98.11, and third, a house and lot, on the north side of Seventieth-street, 225.6 feet west of Third-avenue, the lot being in size 19 by 100.11. In addition to the above JAMES M. MILLER, also by order of the Supreme Court in foreclosure, under the direction of WALTER L. LIVINGSTON, Esq., referee, will to-day offer at auction one lot, 20.11 by 65, with building thereon, situate on the north-west corner of Third-avenue and One Hundred and Third-street.

To-morrow, Tuesday, Jan. 9, at a foreclosure sale under the direction of JAMES H. COLEMAN, Esq., referee, JOSEPH McGUIRE will dispose of a house and lot—the latter 25 by 100—on the south side of Forty-third-street, 100 feet west of Third-avenue.

On Wednesday, Jan. 10, E. H. LUDLOW & Co. will offer at public auction the valuable tenement property known as No. 227 East Forty-fifth-street, north side, between Second and Third avenues, comprising a large five-story brick house, 25 by 55, accommodating twenty families, with lot 25 by 100.5. The premises rent for $800 per month. The same firm, by order of executors, will also offer at auction a leasehold property, known as No. 269 West Houston-street, north side, between Hudson and Varick streets, comprising a lot, 25 by 100, with two buildings thereon, front and rear respectively. The lease is one from Trinity Church for twenty-one years from May 1, 1867, ground rent $250 per annum. The following City real estate, will in addition be offered by JOSEPH McGUIRE, under two Supreme Court orders, in foreclosure, JAMES H. COLEMAN, Esq., referee: 20 full lots on the east side of Ninth-avenue, forming the block front, between One Hundred and Sixteenth and One Hundred and Seventeenth streets, and a house and lot—latter 16.9 by 90—on the south side of Twenty-fifth street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues, known as No. 256. The most interesting sale, however, to take place on Wednesday is one which an extensive line of Brooklyn property will be offered at auction by M. A. J. LYNCH & HUGH N. CAMP, and to which particular attention is called. The firm on the day named propose to sell, at the Exchange in this City, ninety lots, fronting on Bond-street, Prospect Park, Brooklyn, and bounded by Washington and Franklin avenues, Montgomery and Crown streets. The property is well located, prospectively very valuable, and the transaction deserves the attention of investors.

For Thursday, Jan. 11, the first really important sale of the year in New-York realty is announced to occur at the Exchange by MULLER, WILKINS & Co., who, by order of the Executors of the estate of DANIEL DEVLIN deceased, will dispose of six first-class five-story marble front stores and lots situate on the northerly side of Canal-street and southerly side of Howard-street, and known as Nos. 261, 263, 265 and 267 Canal-street, and Nos. 21 and 23 Howard-street. The lots on Canal-street are together in size 100 by 110, and on Howard-street 49.8 by 100. The stores on the property are thoroughly built and are at present rented at the rate of $12,000 per annum. The location being within 250 feet of Broadway is and will always be for business purposes a desirable one, and the result of the auction, as one likely to exert an influence upon the market, is waited for with interest. The same firm will also on Thursday, by order of the Supreme Court, under the direction of W. W. GOODRICH, Esq., referee, offer for sale a one-third interest in two blocks of land bounded respectively by Fifty-ninth, Sixtieth and Sixty-first streets, Eighth-avenue and Broadway. On Thursday also, JOSEPH McGUIRE, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, under the direction of D. P. INGRAHAM, Jr., Esq., referee, will offer for sale a house and lot—the latter 25 by 95—located on the south side of Twenty-third-street fifty feet east of Fourth-avenue.

FINANCIAL.

A FIRST-CLASS
NEW-YORK SECURITY
AT A LOW PRICE.

The unexpanded offer for sale the FIRST MORTGAGE SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD BONDS of the Syracuse and Chenango Valley Railroad, at 90 and accrued interest.

This road runs from the City of Syracuse to Smith's Valley, where it unites with the New-York Midland Railroad, thus connecting that city by a direct line of road with the Metropolis.

Its length is forty-two miles, its COST ABOUT $40,000 PER MILE, and it is MORTGAGED FOR LESS THAN $12,000 PER MILE; the balance of the funds required for its construction having been raised by subscription to the capital stock.

The road approaches completion. It traverses a populous and fertile district of the State, which insures it a paying business, and it is under the control of gentlemen of high character and ability. Its bonds possess all the requisites of an inviting investment. They are amply secured by a mortgage for LESS THAN ONE-THIRD THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY. They pay SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD INTEREST, and are offered five per cent. below par. The undersigned confidently recommend them to all classes of investors.

The attention of investors is called to the above Bonds, which are issued to the Kansas City and Memphis branch of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company. The total debt of Greene County, prior to the issue of these bonds, was about $15,000. The entire issue of these bonds is $400,000, in coupon bonds of $1,000 each, bearing date Aug. 1, 1871, and maturing in twenty years. Interest, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, is payable in New-York on the first days of February and August in each year. We are authorized to offer this loan to the public at 90 and accrued interest, with the reserved right to advance the price at any time. THE WILKESBARRE STRIKE.

All the Collieries but One Idle—Trouble Apprehended.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SCRANTON, Penn., Jan. 7.—The strike of the coal-miners at Wilkesbarre, eighteen miles from this city, has become general. Every colliery but one is now idle. Since my last dispatch to the TIMES, the works of SWOYER & Co. and JOHN R. DAVIS have stopped. The coal works at Sugar Notch are also idle. CHARLES PARRISH, President of the Wilkesbarre Iron and Coal Company, insists that the ten per cent. reduction is just and proper, and in accordance with the basis. The general opinion is that the men will surrender unconditionally, and recommence work at an early day. JAMES KENLY, President of the Working Men's Union of the Anthracite Coal Region, has issued a call to the delegates of the General Council to meet on Tuesday next at Mahanoy City, Schuylkill County, to transact important business. No doubt strenuous effort will then be made to adjust the present difficulties.

A well-founded rumor is afloat that PARRISH will attempt to place non-union miners in his coal works, and trouble is apprehended.

Coal Miners' Riot in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 7.—The coal miners at Nelsonville, yesterday, refused to permit men not members of the Union to work in Brooks' Coal Mine, threatening them with violence if they persisted in going into the mine. Several shots were exchanged. A force from this city was summoned by telegraph, and about twenty of the ringleaders among the miners were arrested and taken to Athens and committed to jail.

EUROPE.

Monarchist Petitions in the French Assembly—Mgr. Dupanloup at the Head of the Education Bureau—The Spanish Cortes.

PARIS, Jan. 7.—There was an uproarious scene in the Assembly yesterday, the occasion being the reading of a large number of petitions praying for the restoration of the monarchy. Some of the petitions wanted the Count DE CHAMBORD, and others the Count DE PARIS for King. The presentation of their rival claims excited the partisans of both Princes to frequent demonstrations, while the Republicans and Radicals made a noisy opposition throughout the reading, which was frequently interrupted. The election of VICTOR HUGO is considered almost certain. It is said that his return to the Assembly will defeat the pending motion for the transfer of the seat of Government to Paris, and that the Monarchists and the enemies of President THIERS secretly favor his election. The Assembly has elected the Presidents of fifteen of the Bureaus. All but three are Conservatives. The Bishop of Orleans is President of the Bureau of Education. The Select Committee of the Assembly, appointed to consider the method of forming a new Constitution, have made a report, which rejects the plebiscitum, and declares it the duty of the National Assembly to make a Constitution. A mortuary statue to the memory of the soldiers of GEN. BOURBAKI's army, who perished after the retreat into Switzerland, was unveiled in Lausanne today, in the presence of 6,000 persons.

MADRID, Jan. 7.—A decree has been promulgated convoking the Cortes on the 22d of January.

CUBA.

Cespedes Said to be Ill in South America—The American Consul at Havana—Discontent With Valmaseda's Removal.

HAVANA, Jan. 7.—A letter from a person in New-Orleans, who is considered well informed in Cuban affairs, and who has already furnished interesting and authentic information, says CESPEDES, President of the Cuban Republic, accompanied by MILLERS, CASTILLO, and MACEO, his Sub-Secretary of War, and another person, left the island on the 24th of October. They embarked near Portillo harbor, and reached Port Royal, Jamaica, in safety. Three of the President's companions went to Jamaica and chartered a schooner, in which CESPEDES sailed for Curacoa, where he now lies very ill. No information has been received through other sources to corroborate the statements in this letter. An official reception was held at the Captain-General's Palace, yesterday, which was "King's Day." It was largely attended. All the foreign consuls were present, including Mr. TORBERT, the United States Consul-General, who was in the full uniform of a General of the United States army. The day passed without the slightest disturbance, notwithstanding the liberty given to the negroes to parade as usual. The rumors of VALMASEDA's removal have produced great dissatisfaction among the people, who consider it unwise and uncalled for.

THE WEATHER.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 7—7 P. M.—The rain, which was Saturday afternoon in Louisiana, has extended slowly northward with threatening or snowy weather over Illinois, Ohio and Virginia. The lowest barometer is now central in Tennessee. The low pressure which was on Massachusetts Bay is now followed by rising barometer and cold north-west winds over New-York and New-England, with clear weather. An area of high barometer has continued over the lakes and Upper Canada, moving slowly eastward. North-easterly winds now prevail from lakes Erie and Michigan to Missouri. The rivers have risen at Cincinnati, Cairo, Memphis and Vicksburg, and fallen at Pittsburg and Nashville. The barometer has fallen on the California coast, with threatening weather and light rain.

PROBABILITIES.

Rising barometer, with north-west winds and clear weather, is probable for Monday, from Alabama to Texas and Missouri. Threatening weather, and possibly light rain or snow, extend from South Carolina to Lake Michigan north-eastward, reaching New-England Monday evening, following the area of high barometer that now covers Upper Canada and the Middle States. Easterly winds prevail on the lakes; north-easterly winds, veering to south-east, on the Atlantic coast. Dangerous winds are not anticipated to-night, except possibly on Lake Erie.

The Lake Park Squatters at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—An anti-rent war is threatened here. Many tenants who have been permitted to occupy Lake Park as a stipulated rent, by orders from the Board of Public Works, for the purpose of erecting temporary warehouses, have declined to pay the two months' rent now due. Various reasons are given for the refusal. Some insist that the ground was dedicated exclusively to park purposes, that the Board of Public Works has no right to give permits, and that, as a consequence, rent cannot be collected. Others insist that the rent is not due until the end of the year, and that they will not pay until then. The Mayor has issued a proclamation notifying the anti-renters that, unless they pay up at once, the Police will be instructed to promptly remove them and their goods.

THE SCHOOL-MASTER NEEDED.

Interesting Facts from the Census Returns of Illiteracy—Influence of Ignorance on the Revenue.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The United States Commissioner of Education, Gen. JOHN EATON, Jr., in his annual report, has prepared from advanced sheets of the census, a variety of statistics of illiteracy. A table giving the nativity of illiteracy in the United States in 1870 shows that there is an aggregate of 777,964 foreign illiterates, of whom 605,595 are in the Northern States; 89,456 in the Pacific States and Territories, and 72,323 in the Southern States; that there is an aggregate of 4,992,916 native illiterates, of whom 680,117 are in the Northern States, 74,304 in the Pacific States and Territories, and 4,117,595 in the Southern States, making a grand total of 5,680,074 illiterates in the entire country. A second table shows that of every 10,000 inhabitants in the whole Union, there are 4,711 whites, 1,230 colored, 16 Chinese, and 7 Indians; the colored race being in excess only in the States of Louisiana, 3,145; South Carolina, 128,187, and Mississippi, 61,505. A table showing the illiteracy of the white race and colored race gives a total of 2,879,543 of the former and 2,769,991 of the latter. The aggregate adult illiteracy of both sexes is 5,837,422, of whom 2,480,501 are in the Southern States. The aggregate of minor illiterates (between ten and twenty-one years) is 2,008,112, of whom 1,608,144 are in the Southern States. North Carolina having the largest number—223,159. Of the Northern States of minor illiterates, Ohio has the largest number—27,654.

The illiteracy of the white adults, or those qualified to vote, is thus divided among the States:

Maine	8,516	Oregon	1,095
New-Hampshire	3,361	Nevada	474

A table of ratios of illiteracy is given, showing that in proportion to the total population of the grand divisions, Northern, Pacific and Southern, the total illiteracy of the Northern is about one-half of that of the Pacific, and less than one-fifth of that of the Southern; that the native illiteracy of the Northern division is less than one-tenth of that of the Southern; that the white illiteracy of the Northern is less than one-half of that of the Southern, that the colored illiteracy of the Northern is about one forty-eighth part of that in the Southern; and that in the Southern division, the adult male illiteracy is nearly four and one-half times, and the total minor illiteracy more than ten times as great as that in the Northern division.

CURIOUS FACTS.

An investigation in regard to the relation of postal and revenue receipts and number of patents issued presents the following facts:

The number of patents issued to the inhabitants of Arkansas was one to every 97,267 persons, while in Connecticut there was one patent issued to every 966 persons. In Arkansas there are sixteen adults unable to write to every 100 inhabitants; in Connecticut there are four adults unable to write, to every 100 inhabitants. In Arkansas the receipts of internal revenue are twenty-six cents, and nine mills per capita; in Connecticut the receipts are $2 54 cents per capita. In Arkansas there resulted during the last year to the Post-office Department a loss of over forty-nine cents for each inhabitant in the State, a loss in amount almost double the internal revenue receipts from the State. In Connecticut there accrued a net profit to the Post-office Department of twenty-six cents per capita. In Florida there are twenty-three adults unable to write to every one hundred inhabitants. In that State one patent was issued to every 31,291 inhabitants, the only six in the entire State. The internal revenue collected amounted to sixty-four cents per capita (of the entire population.) From that State the Post-office Department suffered a loss of ninety-two cents per capita. Contrast this with California, where the number of patents issued was one to every 9,462 inhabitants, and the amount of internal revenue collected was $6 42 per capita! There was a loss to the Post-office of $1 50 per capita, but this deficit is accounted for in part by the long lines of transportation, to the cost of which the thinly-settled intervening districts do not greatly contribute. But in California there are only four adults unable to write to every one hundred of the inhabitants. In Tennessee twelve adults are unable to read and write to every one hundred of the inhabitants, and the State pays internal revenue at the rate of sixty-nine cents per capita, while Ohio, in which there are four illiterate adults to every one hundred inhabitants, pays $2 of internal revenue per capita. In Massachusetts, where there are three adults illiterate persons out of every one hundred inhabitants, the excess of Post-office receipts above expenditures was over $700,000.

OTHER CENSUS FIGURES.

The Commissioner discusses at considerable length the leading educational questions now before the people. An appendix, occupying over 600 pages, is given, containing a statement of educational progress in the several States and the European countries; twenty-six tables of educational statistics, collected by the office, occupying 130 pages; also original papers on various topics of interest. Among these is one by Judge NOAH, on the Press as an educator, and full of statistics of general interest. Dr. EDWARD JARVIS, of Dorchester, Mass., has an original article upon insanity, in its relations to education, with matters of vital importance to parents and educators. Prof. GILMAN, of Yale, gives a report on the National Schools of Science. There are also articles on Kindergarten, Education for Women, Education of Workmen, &c.

THE LOUISIANA FACTIONS.

Efforts to Implicate the General Government—Action of Army Officers Taken on Their Own Responsibility.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Both factions at New-Orleans have continued to ply the President and War Department with telegrams giving their respective accounts of the occurrences, and each soliciting action in its behalf; but the President has absolutely refused, in every case, to give any order or instructions for the use of the military, either in behalf of the Warmoth faction or of the Carter faction. The partisans of the Warmoth wing here have done their best to involve the President in the difficulty by appealing to him to befriend WARMOTH, but without avail. CARTER, the leader of the Anti-Warmoth faction, yesterday telegraphed the President as Speaker of the Legislature, calling on him, under section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States to use the troops to protect the Legislature and Government of Louisiana against domestic violence. This dispatch was referred to the Attorney General, and it was decided that Mr. CARTER might possibly be the legal Speaker, but he was certainly not the Legislature, and the request was denied as irregular and unauthorized. Gov. WARMOTH'S impudent dispatches to the President through Senator WEST, which were made public with an apparent purpose, will fail of their purpose. He has as yet made no appeal for the help of the United States troops in that city, but has simply charged upon the President an improper support of the other side. Gen. EMORY, who is in command of the troops at New-Orleans, yesterday telegraphed that the use of the troops the day before was entirely on his own responsibility, he deeming a display of force important and necessary in preserving the peace, which effect was produced. He consulted neither faction, and would act only as a Police. No orders have been given him by the War Department, and probably none will be. The Treasury Department, on hearing of the use of the revenue cutter Wilderness by one of the factions, ordered Collector CASEY to bring her back, and reprimanded her Captain for a violation of the regulations. She returned last night, and the Senators who went off on her are now in the city. The use of this vessel for such a purpose is a gross impropriety, and if Mr. Collector CASEY cannot properly explain it, his official head is likely to go into the basket. The present is regarded as a most excellent occasion for giving both the factions there a lesson which they will remember. What with ill-judged realouts on the one hand and unscrupulous plotters on the other, the safest way out of the difficulty for the Administration, so far as it is concerned, is to rebuke both.

Detailed Account of the Assault at T. Morris Chester—Names of State Officials Alleged to be Present.

From the New-Orleans Times, Jan. 3.

The new Lieutenant-Governor appears to be inaugurating with a vengeance the reign of terror, and if the assault which it is alleged was on Monday, committed on helpless women is the initial step to further outrages, the people of Louisiana have reason to congratulate themselves on the possession of this shining official luminary. Shortly after dark, Mrs. STACKHOUSE, a quadroon woman, residing on Claiborne-street, just above Canal, was attracted by the roll of carriages in front of her house, and the violent ringing of the door bell. One of her daughters ran into the parlor, and Mrs. STACKHOUSE cried after her not to open the door, but in the uproar without the order was not heard, and in rushed a party of colored officials, who at once took possession of the premises, and commenced singing in a loud voice, "What shall we do to be saved?" Mrs. STACKHOUSE at once came down stairs, and calling PINCHBACK into the dining-room, in rear, informed him, that although New-Year's Day, her house was only open to friends, and begged him to at once retire with his followers. PINCHBACK seemingly appreciated the delicacy of the situation, and accordingly, without becoming in a respectable domicile, after some thought concluded it prudent to leave, and the noisy crowd gradually walked out of the room.

About the time they had reached the yard T. Morris Chester, a colored man of considerable attainments, who is on a lecturing tour, and stopping temporarily in the city, passed. He had been visiting the family of Administrator LEWIS, a few doors further up, and it is stated was on his way to one of the colored churches to delivery a lecture. When he had reached Mrs. STACKHOUSE'S house, JEFF. CARONGE, it is alleged, caught him by the arm, and, slapping him in the face, commenced beating him unmercifully with his fist. A crowd at once surrounded him, and the unfortunate CHESTER was crowded into a corner, and there assailed by several of the party.

In the meantime Mrs. STACKHOUSE, who had reached the front gallery, was caught by Senator PIERSAGACE, (colored,) who said he "wanted a kiss." She endeavored to shove him away, but PIERSAGACE, coming up at the time, pushed her into the parlor. The new Lieutenant-Governor was at present in the house, but, with his chancery, and directed the men to stand back. The lecturer remarked to him: "I'm man enough to defend myself, but I've done nothing to deserve this." "Oh, if that's the case," replied PINCHBACK, "I'll leave them to you."

Chester then finally became the target of the party, and was standing in the front door, when one DUNBAR, our informant states, rushed after him, and while standing on the second step of the gallery, fired a pistol between Mrs. STACKHOUSE'S two daughters, wounding CHESTER on the forehead. The ball entered above the right eye, and passing under the skin lodged in the back of his head. He was pursued and beaten over the head with a sword-cane until that weapon was broken to pieces. During the mêlée Mrs. STACKHOUSE was pushed down, one of her daughters was felled by a blow from a cane, and the other was burned on the face by the powder from the pistol. As soon as the news got out the ruffians hurried into their carriages and were driven off. CHESTER was taken to the office of Dr. BEACH, where the ball was extracted, and afterward sent to the residence of Mrs. BRIDGES, on Bienville-street. The physician attending him declines to express an opinion concerning his condition, but it is reported to be quite critical.

Mrs. STACKHOUSE states that when the carriages stopped at her door, several parties cried out, "This is not the house; we're going to LEWIS'." To this, she says, PINCHBACK replied: "No, we'll go to hurry first." She further alleges that none of the parties were sufficiently under the influence of liquor not to know what they were doing, and that PINCHBACK was especially sensible. She learned casually that they had been at the house of Senator BARBER. The excitement, of course, attracted a large crowd to the vicinity, and for a time the greatest excitement prevailed. Later in the evening, the party, with the exception of DUNBAR and CARONGE, went to the house of Administrator LEWIS, and an angry altercation ensued between them and the family.

PINCHBACK, it is alleged, had in the meantime changed his hat and coat, and seemed greatly excited at hearing the report that he had fired the shot. The weapon which inflicted the wound was found Monday night in the gutter near Mrs. STACKHOUSE'S residence. She was arrested Monday morning by Officer BARRY, who begged her in the most earnest manner to hush the matter up, stating that were the full details of the affair made public, it would ruin PINCHBACK forever. The following is a list of those who, it is asserted, were present, but the entire party are not known: Lieut.-Gov. Pinchback, Senators P. B. Sheridan, Senator Butler, Paul Dunbar, Henry Curtis, George James, N. W. Green, George Paris, W. G. Brown, Messrs. Caronge, Tribaux and Courcelle.

Election of a Lady as Enrolling Clerk of the Minnesota Senate.

The Legislature of Minnesota met and organized on the 2d inst. In the Senate, as the report published in the St. Paul papers show, after the election of Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Engrossing Clerk, Senator MILNE read the following letter from Miss WEMMS, declining an election as Enrolling Clerk:

ST. PAUL, Jan. 2, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Having been informed that there was considerable difficulty arisen on the part of certain Senators on account of my nomination for the office of Enrolling Clerk, and that certain ones who had given me their votes are regretting it, and not wishing to hold an office against my party given, I have the honor to decline an election to it under these circumstances. Thanking those gentlemen to whom I am obligated for their generous support and assistance, I have the honor to be, Very respectfully,

ALICE WEMMS.

Senator BILLSON nominated CHARLES F. JOHNSON, and Senator BEMAN renominated Miss WEMMS, and Senator CHEWNING nominated Mr. J. D. WOOD, of Ramsey County. Senator MORRILL moved that the election of Enrolling Clerk be postponed until the next day. This was lost by a vote of 14 noes to 21 ayes. Senator BILLSON made a speech in favor of Mr. JOHNSON, in which he predicted the destruction of the Republican Party by the Scandinavians if Mr. JOHNSON was not elected. Senator CHEWNING said that they had voted for a lady of Miss WEMMS's party, and that Senator BEMAN, in proposing another lady, had followed his example. The vote followed by Senator CHEWNING showed several others. At the point the name of Capt. WOOD was withdrawn; and the roll being called, the vote stood: Miss WEMMS, Mr. Mr. Johnson, 1; J. D. Wood, 2. And Miss WEMMS was declared to be elected Enrolling Clerk, and came forward and was duly sworn into office.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

The Reopening of Congress To-Day—Woman Suffrage Convention—An Indian Boundary Complication—International Copyright—Miscellaneous.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—In the Senate, to-morrow, the unfinished business, after the usual morning hour, is the Amnesty bill, which has been considered by the Committee of the Whole, and is now before the Senate for the final vote, one amendment having been made, and a renewal of Mr. SUMNER'S Civil Rights bill as another amendment being expected. The understanding was that the final vote should be taken without debate, but that agreement was violated the last day before recess, and what course will now be taken can only be guessed. There is a promise of another speedy attack on the Administration, though what line will be chosen does not appear.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

No one knows what subject will come prominently before the House. A member remarked yesterday that the House fulfilled one passage of Scripture literally, and that was in "taking no thought for the morrow." From either the status of the civil service reform, or the condition of Spanish affairs, or the imbroglio in Louisiana, something sensational may be expected to be brought up in some manner.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The grand entrée here for the season of the Woodhull and Claflin wing of the Woman Suffrage organization will take place this week, Wednesday, for which, with the two following days, a Convention is announced in Lincoln Hall. When the Boston wing of the party was here a while ago, Mrs. WOODHULL came down, laughed at them for being dull, and promised to show people during the Winter a Convention that should be lively. The one to be held this week is gathered in fulfillment of her promise.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The surveyors of the General Land Office, on a careful survey for that purpose during the last Summer, fixed the location of the ninety-sixth meridian of longitude where it passes through the Indian territory, and found that it was three miles, or nearly that, west of the supposed and hitherto accepted location of the line. This has produced some complication about Indian boundaries, and especially the boundary between the Cherokees and the Osages, which is before the Interior Department for settlement. The Cherokees hold several millions of acres of lands in the Indian Territory under treaty stipulations, with the provision that the Government of the United States may settle uncivilized tribes on any portion of the Cherokee lands west of the ninety-sixth meridian by paying a price to be fixed by the terms of the same treaty. About two years ago the Peace Commission located the Osages on a strip of this land, and the price fixed was fifty cents per acre. They determined the boundary by the line then supposed to mark the meridian, and now the moving of this line three miles west takes from the Osages, if the strict terms of the treaty are complied with, the very best lands which they have been occupying. The Cherokees through their delegation here claim the lands The Osages know nothing about the ninety-sixth meridian, but do understand what the valley of the Verdigris River is, and object to leaving it or paying out of their fund again for it, when they supposed it already theirs. There was a hearing of the case yesterday, but no decision was reached. If the old line should be declared the one contemplated by the treaty, the Cherokees would lose nothing they have ever before supposed they owned, but they seem as selfish as white men, and want all they can obtain.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

The notice which has been given by the Press of the country to the action which has thus far been taken in Congress on the International Copyright law, has revealed a good deal more interest in the subject than was supposed to exist, and the Library Committee, which has the bill in charge, has received a great many letters containing inquiries and suggestions, or simply calling for copies of the bill. It is the purpose of the Committee to ask the attendance of representatives of the different classes of persons whose interests are involved, and secure their statements. Publishers, artists, authors, dramatists and theatrical managers will be called upon to give their views upon the subject generally, and particularly as to how it effects themselves. The Committee is reported to take a lively interest in this proposition which has been referred to them.

ANOTHER FRAUD.

A warrant has been issued for the arrest of JAMES TAYLOR, of Cherokee County, North Carolina, for defrauding the Government to the amount of $60,000 in the settlement of fraudulent claims for bounty and back pay somewhat after the manner of the Beatty case in Tennessee. An officer has been charged with the duty of making the arrest, and has left here with the warrant.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

The week of prayer, appointed by the Evangelical Alliance, which begins to-morrow throughout the world, will be generally observed in all the Protestant churches of this city by prayer services every night this week, and also by a union service at Lincoln Hall every day at 12 o'clock. There is much interest manifested in this observance, and the meetings will be largely attended.

AMATEUR THEATRICALS.

Washington is promised a sensation in an amateur theatrical performance on Thursday next, for St. John's Church charities. The National Theatre, the largest in the city, has been engaged. The amateurs are of the best and well-known families. The President and the Cabinet have been invited and are expected to attend. The demand for tickets among the élite is unprecedented, some having been telegraphed for from New-York and Philadelphia.

TWO NATIONS.

A British Parallel Between American and English Foreign Policy.

From the Pall Mall Gazette, Dec. 19.

It is well for our national pride that the politicians who are most given to holding up the United States as a pattern to England usually confine themselves to points as to which it is not difficult to disprove our alleged inferiority. If it suited their purpose, they might make their lecture very much more telling. There is one department of affairs in which an Englishman can hardly measure his country against the United States without being humiliated by the contrast. In the conduct of their foreign affairs the American Government have behaved differently at different times. The tone of one President has been arrogant, the tone of another has been unassuming. The power of the nation, and its readiness upon proper occasion to make that power felt, have in one Message been needlessly paraded, while in another they have been kept in the background. But whichever course the Government has taken, and to whatever political party the Executive has happened to belong, there has in one important respect been a remarkable uniformity in attitude both of the Government and of the people. At no time has any foreign nation been left in uncertainty what the action of the United States would be in a matter which concerned, however remotely, their interest or their honor. Their isolation from Europe has prevented their taking a frequent part in European affairs. But it is long since any European power has thought it safe to treat them lightly, or has regarded their enmity as a danger of which no count need be taken. The secret of this respect is the consistency and the resolution of their policy. There has never been any room for doubting whether the American Government would resent this or that affront, or whether the American people would sustain them in resenting it. It has been well understood all along that, if the United States were injured or insulted, the Government would demand redress as a matter of course, and demand it with the determination of obtaining it at any cost and with the knowledge that the people stood at his back. Amid all the exaggerations of American political oratory there have been no speeches which could mislead foreign Powers on this, the point of all others on which it behooves foreign Powers to be accurately informed. There are not be many things about which the United States would fight, but there are a few things about which no American was ever heard to hint a suspicion that his countrymen would not fight. This is the reason why the United States Government always speaks with so great an assurance of strength. It rarely shows any anxiety to force on a quarrel, but it never shows any anxiety to avoid one if avoidance has to be purchased by even against discredit. Gen. GRANT'S Message is a fair specimen of the average drift of such documents. * * As regards the insurrection in Cuba the Message makes no unnecessary professions of neutrality; it says merely what is more to the purpose—that the "naval commanders in Cuba have been instructed, in case it should become necessary, to spare no effort to protect the lives and property of bona fide American citizens, and to maintain the dignity of the flag." It may be said that these are only words of course. But that does not alter the fact that in the case of the United States the significance of such words, of course, is universally understood. The English Government might have used the same words under similar circumstances, and if it had used them would probably have meant to carry them out. But the difference is that half the world would have disbelieved that they had this intention; and if the power against whom the warning was directed had chanced to be included in this half, it might have been laid on to provoke reprisals through its very conviction that nothing of the kind was to be expected. How the United States have benefited by the contrary conviction is shown by the infrequency of their foreign wars, for nowadays wars seem mostly to come from uncertainty on the part of the aggressor how far his adversary's patience will go.

Why is it that the reputation of England as regards her foreign policy is so much less than that of the United States? The proximate answer is easily given. The tone of the English Government is often undecided because it is held to be quite a matter of speculation how far the English people can be trusted to echo a decided tone. Our own belief is that it is a mistake to think this question as a matter of speculation. Englishmen have not a character for being lovers of peace at any price which is not really deserved. But though it is not deserved in the sense of being true, it is deserved in the sense that it is their own fault that they have not it. They are so fond of saying that they are Englishmen would endure either hurt or contumely a moment after they had realized the nature of the wrong done them. But undoubtedly they have so expressed themselves as to convey this notion to the minds of foreign Governments; and, stranger still, to convey it in some degree to their own minds. * * * The mischief we incur by reason of the error is very serious. In all parts of the world England has important interests at stake, and interests which are often defended by no commensurate show of strength. Where this is the case there is no real security against attack except in the belief of those from whom the attack may come, that it is certain to be a losing game if it has within the compass of the English people to make it so. Without this the contrast between the greatness of the gain and the apparent smallness of the effort required for reaping it may at any moment overweigh the prudence of an adversary, and land us in a war which would assuredly have been averted if the disposition of Englishmen had been properly understood. Since neither profit nor honor is to be gained by this persistent misrepresentation of themselves, it would be but common prudence if our countrymen could be persuaded in this one instance to "Americanize their institutions."

The Late Special Election for Governor in Georgia.

From the Atlanta New Era, Jan. 4.

From the best information we can gather, there were not exceeding 35,000 votes cast at the late Democratic "election" for Governor. The voting population of the State exceeds 200,000—the most accurate estimate is 205,000. So that the vote on the 19th ult. did not exceed three-tenths of the vote of the State! No one is surprised at this. The election law and the manner of its passage, was held to be illegal by the sober and better informed of the Democratic leaders themselves. As a legal proposition, it was a question upon which the Democrats were divided—and the vote shows that one-half, very, even of that party in the State, either held the election to be illegal or else regarded it as utterly useless, incurring an unnecessary expense to the State of not less than $150,000. Hence, should Col. SMITH, by hook or crook, be admitted to the Gubernatorial Chair, his administration will incur an extra expense to the State of not less than $150,000 per month.

It is hardly probable, under all the circumstances, that SMITH will push his claims further than a formal demand for possession of the office. We cannot believe that he will make any further issue, when less than three-tenths of the vote of the State, and considerably less than one-half the vote of his own party, is at his back. It would be a very damaging showing to go abroad, especially in the face of the well-known fact that the vacancy is already filled in the manner and by the means constitutionally appointed.

Nature's Contrary—Remarkable Members of a Pig Family.

A MR. GOODWIN, residing in Long Island City, is said to have a most remarkable pig family. Eighteen months since he raised a litter of two pigs. Today one of them weighs about 300 pounds, and the other only eight pounds. Another remarkable fact in connection with this pig family is that the small one eats as much as the large one; in fact he eats two or three times as much as his own weight every day. The little pig seems healthy and sleek, and bears the same resemblance to the hog family as other pigs, except in size.
